Meanwhile on the 16th October the charge was repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate of the District who directed the complainant and his witnesses to attend on a particular day but subsequently without having examined them or the complainant referred the matter to the Sub Deputy Magistrate. That officer having reported the charge to be false the Magistrate on the 9th November wrote upon the police report which had meanwhile on the 26th October been submitted to him the following direction:—show as false. On the 19th November a counter prosecution under s 211 182 and 500 of the Penal Code was sanctioned and eventually on the 22nd May 1879 resulted in the petitioner being convicted. While the counter prosecution was pending, the petitioner on the 22nd April applied to the Magistrate to proceed with his complaint according to law but was informed that his complaint was dismissed. On the following day the Magistrate re-issued the following order:—It is dismissed in accordance with my decision recorded in the police report under s 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The complainant's solicitor finding that no sanction had been obtained as required by s. 180 of the Criminal Procedure Code for proceeding with the charge under s. 182 of the Penal Code applied to the Magistrate for leave to withdraw the complaint which the Magistrate granted adding to his order the words "accused is discharged." The complainant having subsequently obtained the requisite sanction filed a fresh complaint on the same charges. It was objected on behalf of the accused that the accused had been acquitted under s. 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that further proceedings were now barred under s. 403. The Magistrate allowed the objection and stopped the proceedings. On application to the High Court—Held that the order of the Magistrate should be reversed and the complaint investigated. The order stopping the proceedings would be legal only if the accused had been acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction which was not the case as the Magistrate could not take cognizance of the charge under s. 182 of the Penal Code without a sanction having been previously obtained. As to the charge under s. 500 of the Penal Code the proper procedure in respect of it was that prescribed for warrant cases. The only legal order that could be made in such a case was an order of discharge under s. 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code and not of acquittal and it was an order of discharge that was actually made. THE SAKSHIN I L R. 32 Bom. 711

125 Revival of complaint after discharge—Power of Presidency Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code 1882 ss 403 436-439—P instituted a complaint of extortion in the Calcutta Police Court against O and B under s. 381 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate suggested that the matter should be settled by arbitration and the accused was discharged on 24th July 1890. The arbitration fell through and on B's application the complaint against O and B was revived on 6th May 1893. On the matter coming before the High Court on revision it was found that the offence being not compoundable the reference of the parties to arbitration was irregular. Held that the order of 24th July discharging the accused was improper; that the provisions of ss 436 and 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not applicable to Presidency Magistrates who therefore can revive a complaint even after discharge; that the High Court has ample powers under the Charter Act if not under the Code to revise an order reviving a complaint after discharge; and that in this particular case the Presidency Magistrate had exercised a proper discretion in reviving the complaint. OPOORNA KUMAR SEIT v PROBOD KUMAR DAS [1 C W N. 49]

Held that the order staying proceedings whether the petition on which it was made was a complaint within s. 4 (a) or not was clearly one made in the course of a judicial proceeding, and was therefore a judicial and not an executive order that it was if not in terms at any rate in effect an order dismissing a complaint and therefore it was not competent to the successor in office to set aside such order of his predecessor. Komal Chandra Pal v Gour Chand Adhikari I L R. 24 Calc. 286 [1 C W N. 185] Nilratam Sen v Jogesh Chandra Bhutta CHARLES I L R. 23 Calc. 993 [1 C W N., 69]

The police enquired into the latter offence only and finding no prima facie case made out reported to that effect to a Magistrate who directed that that offence be expunged from the list of reported offences. Held that under the circumstances there had been no dismissal of the complaint in respect of the former offence and that there was no bar to the complaint into that offence being taken up and proceeded with. GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY v SHIDAYA I. L ————— Screening an offender—Penal Code s 214—The accused agreed to give Rs 10 to S in consideration of his not giving evidence against A who was charged with the offences of house-breaking by night and theft in a building. S gave evidence against A who was however acquitted. The accused was charged under Penal Code s 214, but was acquitted. Held that the acquittal was right. S. 214 of the Penal Code presupposes the actual commission of an offence or the guilt of the person screened from punishment. QUEZY EMPRESS v SAMINATHA I. L. R. 14 Mad., 400

2 ————— Adultery—Withdrawal of charge—Where the husband of a woman with whom the accused was alleged to have committed adultery professed himself unwilling to proceed with the prosecution and the Assistant Judge thereupon ordered the accused to be discharged, the Court in the exercise of its discretion, declined to interfere. REG v RAMLOCHERIO 5 Bom. Cr. 27

3 ————— Withdrawal of charge—The power given to Magistrates to permit complainants to withdraw their complaints is confined to cases falling for disposal under Chap IV of the Criminal Procedure Code. Consequently a charge of adultery cannot be withdrawn by a complainant with the Magistrate's consent. QUEZY v GUMPHREY 3 N. W. 234

4 ————— Penal Code s 497—Appeal—N charged T with having committed adultery with his wife. On enquiry into the charge by the Magistrate the case was committed to the Sessions Court for trial when T was convicted. T appealed to the High Court. After conviction and his wife were reconciled and N at the hearing of the appeal asked for leave to compound the offence. Held that at that stage of the case sanction could not be given to withdraw the charge. EMPRESS OF INDIA v. THOMPSON I L R. 2 All. 330

II. — Assault—Penal Code s 214—Act irrespective of intention—The offence of assaulting a man and intentionally causing grievous hurt does not consist of an act irrespective of the intention and cannot be compounded. The term "assault" used in illustration (b) to s. 214 of Act XLV of 1860 does not mean assault as defined in the Code. It is to be construed in its general and more ordinary sense. QUEEN v. MADAN MOHUN [6 N W 303]

6. — Cheating—Forgery—Act X of 1852 (Criminal Procedure Code) s 159—Constructive effect of Act with reference to Bill before the Legislature—Cheating and forgery are not offences which may be lawfully compounded. Where a Magistrate decided that certain offences could be lawfully compounded, having regard to a Bill which the Legislature had brought in amending s. 214 of the Penal Code—Held that it was irregular for such Magistrate to allow his decision to be guided by anything but a Bill that had not become law and it was his duty to have interpreted that section without reference to merely contemplated legislation. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LATUAK HUSAIN v. HARBANS SIDON I L R. 3 All. 283

7. — Criminal breach of trust—Penal Code ss 213 214 406—The offence of criminal breach of trust under s. 406 of the Penal Code cannot under the terms of ss 213 and 214 of the same Code be lawfully compounded. IN THE MATTER OF A REFERENCE FROM THE CHIEF PRESIDENCY MAGISTRATE 6 C L R. 382

REG v. MUTHAVAN I L R. 1 Mad. 181

8. — Criminal misappropriation—Penal Code s 404—An offence under s. 404 of the Penal Code is not one of the class of offences that may be compounded. ANONYMOUS CASE [7 Mad. Ap. 34]

9. — Enticing away married woman—Criminal Procedure Code 1872 s 189—The offence of enticing away a married woman with a criminal intent is not an offence which may lawfully be compounded. REG v. MUTHAVAN [I L R. 1 Mad. 181]

10. — House trespass—Criminal Procedure Code 1882 ss 248 249—Case sent up by police—A criminal charge under s. 448 of the Penal Code having been instituted the accused was sent up by the police before a Deputy Magistrate of the first class. Previous to any evidence being taken the complainant intimated to the Magistrate that the case had been amicably settled and that he did not wish to proceed further in the matter upon which the Magistrate recorded an order. Compromised; defendant acquitted. Subsequently the Magistrate of the district relying upon ss 243 and 249 and professing to act under s. 437 of the

Criminal Procedure Code directed the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and proceed regularly with the case. Held that ss 243 and 249 had no bearing on the case and that the mere fact of the accused having been sent up by the police did not prevent the offence which was legally compoundable from being compromised and that consequently the order of the Deputy Magistrate was perfectly correct and legal. QUEEN EMRESS v. HOWAR JAN [I L R. 10 Cal. 551]

11. — Hurt—Voluntarily causing hurt—Penal Code s 323—Criminal Procedure Code 1872 s 168—The offence of voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code is one which may lawfully be compounded and the withdrawal from the prosecution in such a case is therefore permissible under s. 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 1861 REG v. JETHA BHALA 10 Bom. 68

12. — Penalties—Penal Code s 214—Causing grievous hurt—Whenever the words "voluntarily intentionally fraudulently dishonestly or others" whose definition involves a particular intention enter along with a specified act into the description of an offence the offence not being one irrespective of the intention is not one which the exception to s. 214 of the Penal Code by itself allows to be compounded. The offence to admit of compromise must be one in this sense irrespective of the intention and it must be one for which a civil action may be brought at the option of the person injured instead of criminal proceedings. The offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt cannot accordingly be compounded. REG v. JETHA BHALA 10 Bom. 68 disapproved REG v. RAHMAT [I L R. 1 Bom. 147]

13. — Kidnapping—The offence of kidnapping can be lawfully compounded. QUEEN v. GORAN MOHUN MITTAL 22 W R. Cr. 26

14. — Mischief—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1852) s 345—Mischief done to the private property of a village Mahār—The accused was charged with mischief for causing damage to crops which were the private property of a village Mahār. The Magistrate refused to allow the offence to be compounded on the ground that the damage was done to a village Mahār and therefore could not be treated as damage affecting only a private person as Mahārs had duties to perform in connection with the village. Held that the offence was compoundable under s. 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1852) as the damage was caused to a private person and not to the public. The fact that the complainant was a village Mahār would not make his personal property the property of the public or even of the Mahār community generally. IN RE MOTIRAM [I L R. 22 Bom., 899]

15. — Wrongful restraint—The causing of wrongful restraint to another may lawfully be compounded. МОТНОООНАТН ПНООМСС v. АНУАРАМ АУАНОКАР 7 W R. 33

16 ————— Requisites for composition of offence valid in law—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) s 340—Onus of proof—Wrongful restraint and confinement of coolies employed on tea garden—Where an accused person alleges that an offence with which he is charged has been compounded so as to take away the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts to try it the onus is on him to show that there was a composition valid in law M a European British subject charged with the compoundable offences of wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement of coolies employed on a tea garden of which he was the manager pleaded that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the cases as they had been compounded by the complainants. The alleged compromise consisted of a Bengali paper signed by the coolies stating that they made razinama (compromise) of the case of their own accord and a paper in English signed by M these papers being given to the District Superintendent of Police who had investigated the complaints and who stated that he asked the coolies as to the contents of the Bengali paper and they said that they had signed it voluntarily and stated its purport and that one of them said in the presence of the others that it was a razinama. G one of the coolies also wrote on the paper the words in Urdu. I will not carry on the case. The Bengali paper was written by the Darogah of the police station in presence of M. The paper signed by M was as follows— I hereby agree with these Ganyam people that there shall be no legal proceedings of any kind taken against them with the exception of those who have not completed their agreements. Those whose agreements have not been completed proceedings will be taken against them on 22nd May if they have not returned to the garden before then. Neither of the papers were explained to G so as to make them intelligible to him for though the Bengali paper was read out G did not understand that language. G was one of the coolies who had completed his agreement with M. Held per PRINSEY J—The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification to act as an inducement for his desisting to abstain from a prosecution here there was no forbearance on the part of M to proceed against G who had served out the term of his engagement and therefore there was no consideration for the agreement to compound. Having regard moreover to the ignorance and inferior intelligence of G it was of vital importance for M to show what led to the alleged agreement and how it was that the Darogah was instrumental to it which he had not done. Per TRIVELIAN J—Compounding an offence supposes an arrangement by which the parties have settled their differences and in the more usual acceptance of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution. Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court

COMPOUNDING OFFENCE—concluded

requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue and unless it appears that the parties were free from influence of every kind and were fully aware of their respective rights it would be impossible to give effect to a so called arrangement or composition. Having regard to the fact that the writer of the Bengali agreement had not been called and that the contracting parties were on the one side ignorant coolies strangers to the land and to the language in which the document was written and on the other a European of some education assisted by his Bengali clerk and having also the assistance of the police it was not proved that G knew what he was about and was fairly contracting. Held therefore by the Court that there was under the circumstances no compounding of the offences with which M was charged valid in law such as to deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to try them. MURRAY & QUEEN EXPRESS I L R, 31 Calo, 103

18 ————— Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) s 340—Filing of petition of compromise in Court—Effect of subsequent withdrawal of petition—Where a complainant a female had presented a petition of compromise in respect of a compoundable offence and the Magistrate had examined her and satisfied himself as to her understanding the same. Held that he was wrong in ordering the petition to be put up with the record but should have immediately dealt with the matter and that he was under the terms of s 345 Criminal Procedure Code obliged to accept the compromise and to give effect to it. Held also that the complainant could not by a subsequent withdrawal of the above petition of compromise insist upon the case proceeding. KUSUM BEWA & BEHNA BEWA [S C W N 322]

19 ————— Offence lawfully compoundable—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) s 342—Petition for withdrawal and compromise—Object and effect of—Duty of Magistrate on receipt of such petition—When a charge is framed against an accused person only of an offence which can be lawfully compounded and a petition of compromise is put in or for leave to compound the offence is put in the Court should allow the parties to compound the offence and acquit the accused. When a petition is put in for withdrawal of or for withdrawal from the case is put in the Court ought to make an order either granting or refusing the application and then to be there and should not put it off by ordering it to be filed with the record to be considered at the close of the trial. MAHOMED ISMAIL & FAIZUDDIN [S C W N 548]

3 ——— Agreement to relinquish claim—Continuing suit after agreement—Liability to repay consideration money—Where during the pendency of a suit the plaintiff in consideration of Rs 2000 executed contemporaneously a farigh kutti or relinquishment of the claim made by him in the suit and an ikramamah or engagement to deliver in a raznamah or deed acknowledging himself to be satisfied—Held that the farigh kutti and raznamah amounted to a decided agreement for the settlement of the action and that although the plaintiff sued as a pauper yet as it was questionable whether he should have been allowed to sue as a pauper and as he had failed to perform his duty according to his engagement in entering up a raznamah he was liable to pay the consideration money of the agreement and the costs incurred in consequence of his unsuccessful and apparently unjust litigation which he had instituted and carried on for the purpose of freeing himself from the obligation incurred by the farigh kutti

■ ——— Mahomedan law—Estate limited to take effect in favour of a person after another's death—It is not consistent with Mahomedan law to limit an estate to take effect after the determination on the death of the owner of a prior estate by way of what is known to English law as a vested remainder so as to create an interest which can pass to a third person before the determination of the prior estate. The parties to a solamah or compromise were on the one side the widow of a Mahomedan she being in possession of villages in Oudh which had belonged to him and of which the summary settlement of 1808 had been made with her and on the other side two brothers alleged to be his sons. By the compromise which was made in the course of proceedings at regular settlement it was agreed that the widow should during her lifetime continue to hold possession and remain proprietor without power of alienation and that after her death the two sons should possess each one-half of the property. Held that on the true construction of the compromise the title of the sons to succeed was contingent upon their surviving the widow and that no interest passed to their heirs on their deaths

■ ——— Penalty for non fulfilment of conditions Suit to enforce—A suit for a habuliat having been brought in the Peshwa Court a deed of compromise was filed in the suit in which it was stipulated that a certain sum would be paid by the defendants to the zamandar as rent of four kaus of land including homestead after mutation of names that Rs 8 on account of outstanding balance and charges connected with the rents would be paid to the plaintiffs within a month and that in default the defendants would have no right to the lands specified. The defendants having failed to fulfil the conditions the plaintiffs executed their decree and realised from them the balance above mentioned and having sued them for the rent obtained a decree. The plaintiffs then brought this suit to recover possession in virtue of the deed of compromise on the ground of non fulfilment of the conditions of the compromise. The first Court gave them a decree which the lower Appellate Court reversed, holding that the deed merely imposed a penalty with a view to punctual payment. Held that as what the defendants had to do was of a perpetually recurring nature and no action which the Court might take would be effectual in preserving the plaintiff from being sued by the zamandar the intention was that the terms should be strictly enforced on failure to perform the conditions and that the defendants should be obliged to surrender the lands

7 ——— Construction and enforceability of compromise of suit between members of grantee's family—Removal of manager—Appointment of receiver—Early in the nineteenth century two villages were granted by the zamandars of Binagang and Guntamanakaur to the list of the Nair rulers of Madras for the maintenance of the rank and dignity of his family which was now represented by the plaintiffs and defendants Nos 1 to 23. The property was long managed by a representative for the time being of the senior line. In 1814 one of the junior members instituted a suit for partition which terminated in a decree dividing the corpus of the property to be indivisible and the annual produce to be divisible in certain shares. Subsequently in 1817 a compromise was entered into by which the parties agreed to vary the distribution of the shares but they agreed that the management of the estate indivisible and indivisible should continue to be vested in the eldest line subject to certain supervision on the part of the other members. The compromise was long acted upon by the family but in 1893 the representative of the senior line died leaving only his widow and infant son. The widow as guardian of the elder son then entered into the management and being a Hindu adopted it as a stranger. The plaintiffs representing a junior line now said for the removal of these persons from management and the appointment of another manager alleging both that they had no right to the manager ship and that they had been guilty of mismanagement. All the members of the family were made parties to the suit. Held that the compromise was binding on the parties and that under the compromise the plaintiffs had no right to joint management; and that the widow of the last manager should be removed from the management and that until one of her sons came of age the estate should be managed by a receiver appointed from among the members of the family. THIRUMALAI NAIR v. 8 ——— Assignment of village part of an impartible estate—Maintenance of a member of a junior branch of a joint Hindu family—Agreement—Arbitration award decree and settlement there on—Revenue by whom payable—A talukdar owning an impartible inheritance was the head of a joint Hindu family of which the defendant his first cousin was a member in a junior branch. In 1861 they came to terms as to the latter's claims upon the ancestral estate. A decree in that year founded upon the award of arbitrators between them declared the talukdar's ownership and the assignment by him of eleven villages to the junior member free of liability in respect of the revenue. These terms were entered in an administration paper or wajib alarz of the talukh before the settlement of 1867 in the record whereof they were also entered. And they were referred to in a sanad granted to the talukdar. When the settlement of 1889 was in progress the profits of the eleven villages and the Government demand thereon had greatly increased and for this jamma the talukdar was liable without any proportionate increase of profit from the eleven villages. In 1881 the talukdar sued for a declaration that the defendant's right in the villages consisted only of a certain amount of allowance for maintenance derivable from them. He also claimed that the defendant should repay to him a sum which he had paid for local cesses. The defence was that the defendant's right in the eleven villages had been conclusively settled in the above proceedings. Held that by the true construction of the decree of 1864 which was the foundation of the title of either party the profits of the eleven villages belonged to the defendant and that the revenue was to be paid as between the two by the plaintiff with the enhancements without benefit to him from the increase in the yield of the land. The principle of the judgments below was that the question to be decided was of the kind where the head of a family and a junior member dispute the amount of maintenance that should be paid. But the property assigned in this case was not of the variable character which belonged to an ordinary allowance for maintenance and there was nothing to show that the Courts had authority to disturb settled arrangements on the ground of their being originally based on claims to maintenance. The talukh was vested in the plaintiff subject to the right of the defendant to hold the eleven villages and as between them the former was liable for the jamma and the latter for the local rates and cesses. LOKVATH v. DISASSAUNATH

B who had only lately attained his age of majority acted on his own account and as guardian of his minor brothers. In a suit by A to carry out the terms of the petition B contended that undue advantage had been taken of his youth and inexperience that the agreement was invalid and that there was no consideration. It appeared that at the time of the agreement there was a dont fide dispute as to the rights of the parties and no evidence of fraud was adduced. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. The elder was kept out of possession of these lands by the younger and he performed the worship at his own expense and the younger took out execution objecting that his brother had not performed his trust as family shrotri so that he had been compelled to perform the ceremonies at his own expense but his objection was overruled. Held on appeal by the younger that the non performance of any ceremonies by the elder brother gave him no cause of complaint unless he could show that such failure was not caused by any default on his own part. PADMAJIBAN MUSTAFI v. whether it would be for benefit of minor to set aside compromise—The plaintiff a minor was as daughter and one of the heirs of A, entitled to  $\frac{1}{2}$ ths of his estate. The value of A's estate was uncertain and depended on whether or not A had been a partner in business with M and whether or not a sum of Rs 30 000 had been paid by M to A in satisfaction of all claims which A had against M in respect of the estate of K a deceased brother of A and former partner in the same business M having on A's death possessed himself of all the estates of A the plaintiff brought a suit against M in which a decree was made ordering an account to be taken of the estate of A which had come into the hands of M. Pending such account M died leaving a will by which he appointed the son of A and another his executors and the suit was revived against them. In their application for probate they stated that the value of M's estate so far as they had been able to ascertain and were aware was Rs 41 000. Shortly after probate was granted negotiations were entered into between the executors and the advisers of the plaintiff for a compromise and a petition was with the concurrence of the executors presented by the plaintiff to the Court asking for its sanction to the terms agreed upon by the parties which were that the plaintiff should receive Rs 20 000 in full of all demands and Rs 5 000 for her costs of suit. This petition took as the value of M's estate the amount stated by the executors in their application for probate and stated that the value of A's estate in case the above mentioned payment by M was proved would be Rs 30 000 and in case it was not proved then a moiety of the estate of M and that considering the difficulties the plaintiff had to meet in proving her case and with a view to put an end to further trouble litigation and expense the above terms had been agreed to on her behalf. These terms of compromise were sanctioned by the Court on the 11th September 1876. Shortly afterwards further property was discovered belonging to the estate of M. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors to set aside the compromise allowing that the terms had been accepted by her on the faith of the representation made by the executors in their application for probate and charging them with wilful and fraudulent concealment. There was evidence to show that some of the property subsequently discovered was such that the defendants as executors ought to have known, even if they did not of its existence at the time of the compromise. Held that even though the executors had no such knowledge and there was no actual fraud yet there was such culpable ignorance and neglect of duty on their part as to amount to fraud and carry with it the consequences of knowledge; and as the compromise had in consequence been entered into by the parties and sanctioned by the Court under a misapprehension of material facts the plaintiff was entitled to have the compromise set aside and the parties restored to their rights in the former suit at the time it was effected. Per PORTER J.—In cases where the

25 ——— Effect of setting aside compromise on right of appeal—In a suit brought on behalf of an infant daughter by her mother as guardian a decision was given partly for and partly against the defendant who thereupon filed an appeal which he afterwards withdrew in accordance with the terms of a compromise purporting to have been made with the mother and daughter. Subsequently at the suit of the daughter the compromise was set aside as fraudulent and collusive, and a review of the original decision, in so far as it was adverse to the plaintiff's interest was allowed. The defendant then applied that his appeal might be revived but his application was rejected by the High Court on the ground that he had deprived himself of his opportunity of appeal by his own fraudulent conduct. Held by the Judicial Committee that the effect of setting aside the compromise was to remit both parties to their original rights and that if the plaintiff was to be allowed to be heard against as much of the original judgment as was unfavourable to her the defendant must similarly be heard against as much of the same judgment as was unfavourable to him. KHARODOOVISA v POTOSHAN JISAN 1 L R. 2 Calc 184 26 W R. 36 [L R 31 A 291]

28 ——— Suit to set aside compromise—Set off—Equitable defence—D was the manager of a religious endowment called the Chunchrad Sansthan. On his death in 1852 disputes arose between C and G regarding the management of the sansthan each claiming to be the heir and successor of D. After a long litigation they entered into a compromise in 1861 by which a portion of the sansthan property consisting of certain manvillas, lands and varahasans were assigned to G and C was left in charge of the rest of the sansthan property together with all the rights, privileges and manpans enjoyed by the hereditary trustee of the endowment. In 1866 by a decree made in a suit called the Charity suit C was removed from his office and the plaintiffs were appointed trustees in his place. In 1889 the plaintiffs filed the present suit to set aside the compromise of 1861 and recover back the sansthan property assigned to G under that compromise. G pleaded by way of set off or equitable defence that if the plaintiff were at liberty to set aside the compromise they were bound to restore to him in lieu of the trust property assigned to him under the compromise certain private property belonging to his adoptive father which he had given up. Held that G could not claim a set off or an equitable defence to recover from the plaintiffs in question the private property there being nothing in the compromise to show that there was any exchange of private property for trust property. DRUMRAJ GANESH DIX v GANESH 1 L R. 18 Bom. 721

On the contrary if acted on either in whole or in part the plaintiff cannot be restored to his original right of action but may bring a suit for the performance of the conditions unaccomplished. Held also where a compromise is filed in Court and a decree passed in accordance therewith such decree must be first set aside before a second suit can be brought on the original cause of action. AMREN BEGUM v MOON BEGUM Agr F B 1

The agreement was in writing and dealt in one clause with the dispute the subject matter of the suit and in a second clause with another dispute of long standing between the parties with which the suit had nothing to do. The plaintiffs subsequently objecting to consent to a decree being taken in terms of the first clause of the agreement the defendants took out a rule nisi calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the agreement should not be recorded in Court and why the Court should not pass a decree in accordance therewith under the provisions of s 375 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The rule was argued on affidavits on either side the plaintiffs objecting that the above section did not apply to such a case as this and that in any case the matter could not be decided on affidavits but evidence must be gone into. Held that s 375 gave the Court the power to deal with such a case as this in the manner required and that this was a proper case in which to exercise such a power and that in the circumstances of this case no definite procedure having been enjoined by the Code the matter might properly be decided on affidavits. 1st made absolute accordingly. 1st TONNEY LALJI v 1st CORIBAI.

The District Judge after some intermediate orders struck off the appeal as prayed in the petition. The two plaintiffs preferred a civil revision petition to the High Court whereupon it was objected that the petition could not be entertained as an appeal lay against the order of the District Judge inasmuch as it was not a decree in pursuance of a compromise under s. 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure but an order passed on a dispute as to whether a compromise had in fact been arrived at. The compromise was presented to the Court and a decree was passed embodying the whole of its terms. Held (1) that an appeal lay against the decree (2) that the decree should have been passed in the terms of such of the provisions agreed upon as related to relief which

Recording compromise—Agreement made out of Court and comprising also matters not the subject of suit—Held by the majority of the Full Bench. MACLEAN C J and TRIVELIAN and BANERJEE JJ (O KINEALY and BEVERLEY JJ dissenting) that where the parties to a suit have by an agreement adjusted the subject matter of the suit the Court can by an order made in the suit under s. 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure direct such agreement to be recorded and make a decree in accordance therewith even if one of the parties to the agreement object. Held (per O KINEALY and BEVERLEY JJ) that the Court could not make such an order the case not being one to which s. 375 applied. Per O KINEALY J—The High Court on its Original Side exercising the equitable jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery, would not on a contested motion give a decree of this nature. Per BEVERLEY J—S. 375 only applies to cases where the adjustment or satisfaction is made in Court and should not be extended to cases adjusted out of Court. BROJODUNLALJI SINHA & RAMANATH GHOSH*

An oral agreement by the parties to a suit that a decree be passed creating a charge on immoveable property above Rs 100 in value = not rendered inoperative by s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The parties to an appeal applied to the Court to pass a decree in accordance with the terms of a compromise and before decree was passed one of the parties objected to such decree being passed on the ground that certain and its precedent to be performed by the other party had not been performed. The Court (it being done by the other party) called for affidavits in proof of the terms of the agreement of

Agreement adjusting suit—Power of Court to determine fact of agreement having been made—Reference of suit to arbitration—Award—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover certain property of which the alleged he had taken possession. Subsequently the "matters in difference in the said suit" were by a signed submission paper referred to arbitration. An award was made ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiff Rs 6000 and cancelling a certain account. It also decided the claim of the plaintiff to two ornaments which was a matter not included in the submission paper but had been verbally referred to the arbitrator in the course of the arbitration. The plaintiff now applied that the submission and award should be filed as an agreement adjusting the suit under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1889) or in the alternative that the award should be filed under s. 56. The defendant disputed the agreement and denied the validity of the award. Held that under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court had jurisdiction to determine whether as a fact the alleged agreement adjusting the suit has been made and if it was satisfied that it has been made to record it. Whether that fact should be tried on affidavit or by oral evidence is entirely for the discretion of the Court. The Court accordingly holding that the suit had been adjusted by the submission and award ordered the same to be filed and the adjustment recorded. Held further that the Court could make no order as to that portion of the award which dealt with matter not relating to the subject matter of the suit. A separate application should be made with regard to the ornaments. SAMIRAI & PREMJI PRAGJI*

63. — Execution of decree—Compromise in execution of decree—Estoppel—Civil Procedure Code as 207A 64—Although a Court executing a decree is bound by the terms thereof and cannot add to or vary or go behind them the effect of s 37, read with s 647 of the Civil Procedure Code is that when a decree is put into execution the proceedings taken therefor amount to a separate litigation in which the parties can enter into a compromise much in the same manner as in a regular suit. Such a compromise does not extinguish the decree and the Court executing the decree is bound subject to the conditions indicated by s 375 to give effect to the compromise. In execution proceedings the word suit in s 310 must with reference to s 647 be read as meaning execution of decree. By reason of the words in s 375 lawful agreement or compromise the provisions of s. 207A become applicable to such a case and so long as the requirements of that section are satisfied, the compromise becomes a part of the decree itself and—at least as between the decree holder and the judgment-debtor—can be given effect to in execution of the decree. When such a compromise has been duly made and sanctioned by the Court executing the decree neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor can renege from the position assumed by them in the matter of the compromise. Even if such a compromise has been irregularly sanctioned by the Court executing the decree—the irregularity not amounting to want of jurisdiction—the compromise must take effect until the order sanctioning it is set aside and until that happens the parties are bound by it in all proceedings relating to the execution of the decree and where they have acted upon it they are estopped thereafter from questioning its validity. Sita Ram v Desirath Das I L R 5 All 49. 1 ———— 'Confession' Meaning of, as used in Evidence Act—Evidence Act 1912, ss 26 30—The word 'confession' as used in the sections of the Evidence Act relating to confessions must not be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission which falls short of being an admission of guilt QUEEN EXPRESS & JAGRUP [I L R. 7 All. 648]

2 ———— Voluntary confession—Proof of guilt—A voluntary and genuine confession is legal and sufficient proof of guilt QUEEN & JETIA REE 7 W R. Cr. 41

QUEEN & SONAOLIAN 25 W R. Cr. 23

4 ———— Statements of accused inconsistent with each other—The ordinary rule of taking confessions as a whole and giving the accused (in the absence of other evidence against him) the benefit of any circumstances that may appear in his favour therefrom cannot apply to confessions which are diametrically opposed to each other but only where the more favourable view is not also luteily inconsistent with the general tenor of the confession QUEEN & MITRO GOPAL DASS BR RAGRE 24 W R. Cr. 80

5 ———— Inconsistent statements—Credibility of—The words actually used by an accused, who is said to have confessed ought to be ascertained. The Court should not accept merely the conclusions at which the witnesses deposing to a confession themselves arrived from the answers which the accused gave to questions put by them. Where an accused makes two distinct statements—the one amounting to a confession of guilt the other repudiating guilt—if the one statement is taken against the accused the other also must be taken for what it is worth in his favour. The Court ought to weigh well the relative credibility of the two statements before it accepts the one in preference to the other QUEEN & BOODHOO [10 B L R. 333]

6 ———— Confessions of prisoner in one case evidence in another—The confessions of the prisoner in one case in which he was convicted cannot be used against him in another case unless they are depaied to on oath either by the person who took them down or by some one else who heard them. 8 ——— Confessions of co accused against others in their absence.—Confessions of two of several accused persons made in the absence of the others are of no weight as against the latter. Such confessions as well as the statements of approvers, are always regarded as tainted because from the position occupied by the persons making them, they are not entitled to the same weight as the evidence of ordinary witnesses. QUEEN v BERN BISHWAS I L. R. 10 Calc. 970

9 ——— Admissibility in evidence.—Criminal Procedure Code s 149 150—To make the confession of a prisoner not uttered in the presence of a Magistrate admissible in evidence the fact disclosed must be one which of its own force independently of the confession would be admissible in evidence. QUEEN v CHODA ATCHERAM [3 Mad. 318]

2 CONFESSIONS UNDER THREAT OR PRESSURE

10 ——— Statement admitting crime but pleading compulsion by others.—An admission by A and B that the crime charged against them was committed by C and D and that whatever else they had in it was under compulsion is not a confession on which any person ought to be convicted. QUEEN v KISTO MUNDOL 7 W R Cr 8

11 ——— Proof of circumstances under which confession was made.—Warning by Magistrate Avertment of—Allegations of irregularity—Duty of Sessions Court—Although the avertment on the record of a Magistrate by whom a prisoner is tried that the accused before making a confession was warned that it was optional with him to answer the questions put to him or not is unavailing as to the fact of such a warning having been given it is not conclusive to show that such a confession has not been made under the influence of fear engendered by previous maltreatment or is not otherwise valueless. Allegations made in a regular and proper manner before a Sessions Court on appeal that a confession made by the accused before the Magistrate who tried the case was made under such circumstances as to preclude its admissibility or diminish its value as evidence should receive due attention and be enquired into. A Sessions Court refusing to make such enquiry commits a grave error in law and procedure. REG v KASHIVATS DIVEKAR [8 Bom. Cr 128]

The prisoner was subsequently put on his trial for criminal breach of trust as a servant in respect of this and of other sums. Held that the words used by the travelling auditor constituted an inducement to the prisoner to confess and that he was a person in authority within the meaning of s 24 of the Evidence Act and that the receipt signed by the prisoner was therefore not admissible in evidence on his trial. REG v NATEJHI DADABHAI 11 Bom. 358

14 ——— Illegal pressure—Presumpt on—Evidence Act s 24—In the absence of evidence that a confession of an accused person has been induced by illegal pressure it is not to be presumed that such confession was so induced. 15 ——— Confession made under threat for a purpose other than to extort confession.—Evidence Act 1872 s 24—A prisoner was tried for wounding with intent to murder and wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The offence was committed on the high seas on board a ship on which the prisoner was a seaman. At the trial it was proved for the prosecution that the master of the ship had sailed from Calcutta and could not be found and the Standing Counsel thereupon tendered in evidence his deposition before the committing Magistrate which contained an admission alleged to have been made to the deponent by the prisoner when in custody. The Court refused to admit the portion of the deposition containing the admission to be read as it was stated to have been made immediately after the prisoner with others had been threatened by the witness with a loaded rifle it was immaterial that the threat was not made to extort a confession but to suppress an attempt at mutiny. QUEEN v HICKS 10 B L R. 30 Statement made to Magistrate.—Criminal Procedure Code 1861 s 109—S 109 of the Code of Criminal Procedure refers to cases where the confession of a prisoner has been made to the Magistrate conducting the investigation and not to the police. It is only when properly made to the Magistrate that the confession can be used as evidence against the prisoner. 34 Improper examination of accused person by Magistrate.—Criminal Procedure Code ss 164 364 533—Evidence Act ss 65 80—Record rejected—The Deputy Magistrate of Malabar purporting to act under the provisions of the Malapilla Act (Madras Act XX of 1869) recorded a statement in the nature of a confession made by F who was under arrest on suspicion of being concerned in a Malapilla outrage. This statement which was made in Malayalam was recorded in English in the form of a narrative and was signed by the Magistrate only. The same Magistrate shortly afterwards purporting to act under the Code of Criminal Procedure before any evidence was recorded against F examined him as to this statement which was read over and translated to him. In answer to questions F admitted that he had made it voluntarily. This examination was recorded according to the provisions of s 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After other evidence was recorded F retracted his statement. He was committed to the Sessions tried and convicted mainly on his own recorded statement and examination. The Deputy Magistrate was examined as a witness and stated that the statement recorded by him was made by F and was correctly recorded, and was made voluntarily. Held that the record of the statement made by F to the Deputy Magistrate was not admissible in evidence against F. PER PARKER J—The provisions of s 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are imperative and s 533 will not render a confession admissible where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of the former section. If the confessional statement of F was recorded by the Magistrate in his executive capacity it was not receivable in evidence and s 80 of the Evidence Act. The action of the Magistrate in examining F as to his confessional statement before there was any legal evidence on the record against him was illegal and therefore the record of such examination could not be used in evidence against F. Inasmuch as the record of the statement of F was not admissible secondary evidence thereof could not be given. QUEEN EMPRESS v VIKRAM I L R, 9 Mad. 224

39 ————— Unsigned confession—Criminal Procedure Code 1872 ss 122 and 346—Oral evidence to prove—The confession of an accused person taken by a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to commit or try him is imperfect if not signed by the accused person or attested by his mark, and is inadmissible as evidence (ss 122 and 346 Criminal Procedure Code). The term Preliminary enquiry in the final clause of s. 346 means such enquiries as are the subject of Claps XII (of enquiries and trials) and XV (of enquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session or the High Court) and therefore that clause does not apply to confessions recorded under s. 122 which refers to an enquiry not during a trial or one held with a view to commitment but an enquiry for the purpose of forwarding confessions when recorded to the Magistrate by whom the case of the accused person is enquired into or tried. Consequently when a confession taken under s. 122 is inadmissible in evidence oral evidence to prove that such confession was made or what the terms of that confession were is inadmissible also (s. 91 of the Evidence Act). REG v. recording of a confession or statement—Magistrate recording a confession and holding subsequent judicial inquiry— Whether a confession made by a prisoner to a Magistrate be regarded as a statement under s 164 or under s 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the terms of the law require that the record should be signed not only by the person who makes the confession or is under examination but also by the Magistrate and that in addition thereto, there should be a certificate in the terms prescribed. Such a confession or statement to be admissible in evidence must strictly comply with the terms of the law. The defect in recording a confession may be remedied under s 533 Criminal Procedure Code by examining the Magistrate who recorded the confession. A confession freely made to a Magistrate and recorded under s 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is admissible in evidence and the fact that after the confession so recorded the same Magistrate holds the subsequent judicial inquiry and commits the case to the Court of Session does not make the confession inadmissible on that ground. EMPRESS v ANAND RAM SINGH I L R 5 Calc 954 explained and distinguished. confession was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in English though made in Hindi which the Deputy Magistrate perfectly well understood and could write. It purported to have been recorded under the provisions of s 161 and was in reply to one question which was set out. The record bore the signatures of the accused and of the Deputy Magistrate as well as the certificate as required by the section. It occupied about five pages of foolscap. At the trial the Sessions Judge excluded this confession on the ground that not having been recorded in the language in which it was made and there being no reason why it should not have been so recorded the document was inadmissible in evidence. He however called the Deputy Magistrate as a witness and admitted in evidence his statement as to what the accused told him. This evidence which occupied only a few lines was to the effect that the accused told him he had committed the murder and on this evidence alone the accused was convicted. On appeal held that the provisions of s 161 read with s 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded and that s 363 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect and that therefore as it was not impracticable to record the confession in Hindi the Sessions Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence. Held further that the Sessions Judge erred in limiting the oral evidence of the Deputy Magistrate as to what the accused told him as seeing that he was acting under the provisions of s 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code the confession was a matter which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document and therefore under s 91 of the Evidence Act no evidence could be given in proof of such matter except the document where as in this case it was in existence and forthcoming. Held also that as the defects in the record could not be cured under s 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code and no secondary evidence could be given no proof of the confession could be given and the accused must be acquitted. JAI NARAYAN JAT v QUEEN EMPEROR

Confession to Presidency Magistrate—Statement of prisoner made before inquiry—Statement of prisoner made in the course of or after inquiry—Criminal Procedure Code (1892) ss 164 364 and 533—Examination of accused persons—The sections comprised in Chap XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1892) (except s 155) do not apply to the Police in the Presidency towns and consequently a statement or confession made to a Presidency Magistrate does not come within s 164, and the procedure prescribed in regard to the recording of statements or confessions by that section and (by reference) s 364 does not apply to statements and confessions recorded by a Presidency Magistrate before the commencement of the trial. ment in Marathi. He also deposed that the statement was correctly recorded in English and that each question and answer when recorded was interpreted to the accused in Marathi and that the accused then made his mark at the end of the recorded statement. 87. — Incriminating statement by prisoner to police officer—Evidence of police constable—A policeman on being cross examined stated that when he arrested the prisoner the prisoner said to him "Some Chinamen at the time of the occurrence came out with hatchets. On re-examination the policeman so far altered the words stated to have been used by the prisoner as to substitute for the words at the time of the occurrence the words at the time and on being asked if the prisoner had explained what time answered he said at the time I struck the deceased." Counsel for the prisoner interposed and objected to the evidence. The Standing Counsel contended that he was entitled to clear up a matter which had been left in doubt by the cross-examination. sware of it—Held that the statement was inadmissible upon the ground that it would be most dangerous to extend the provisions of s 27 and allow a police officer who is investigating a case to prove an information received from a person accused of an offence in the custody of a police officer on the ground that a material fact was thereby discovered by him when that fact was already known to another police officer. ADU SHIKAR v QUEEN EMPRESS while in police custody Admissibility of—Evidence Act s 8 25 26 27—Confession—Confession leading to discovery of a fact—Statements as evidence of conduct—The accused was charged under s 411 of the Penal Code with dishonestly receiving stolen property. In the course of the police investigation the accused was asked by the police where the property was. He replied that he had kept it and would show it. which the property was kept. He made a second statement when pointing out the spot to the effect that he had buried the property there. It was contended that those statements were inadmissible having been made when the accused was in custody of the police. Held (1) that the above statements were clearly in the nature of a confession, as they suggested the inference that the prisoner committed the crime and even if not intended by the accused as a confession of guilt they were an admission of a criminalising circumstance and would form a very important part of the evidence against the accused as showing that he had not come by the property honestly and were therefore properly within the rule of exclusion in regard to confessions made by a person in custody of the police. (2) That neither of the above statements was admissible in evidence under explanation 1 of s 8 of the Evidence Act I of 1872 as evidence of the conduct of the accused. s 8 as far as it admits a statement as included in the word "conduct," must be read in connection with ss 25 and 26 and cannot admit a statement as evidence which would be shut out by those sections. (3) That the accused's statement that he had buried the property in the fields, was admissible in evidence under s 27 of the Evidence Act as it at the police in motion and led to the discovery of the property. A statement is equally admissible under s 27 whether the statement is made in such detail as to enable the police to discover the property themselves or whether it be of such a nature as to require the assistance of the accused in discovering the exact spot where the property is concealed. QUEEN EMPRESS v KAMALIA

97 — Evidence Act 1872 s 30—Admissibility of confession of one against others—A prisoner who pleads guilty at the trial and is thereupon convicted and sentenced cannot be said to be jointly tried with the other prisoners committed on the same charge who pleaded not guilty. Where therefore one of eight prisoners before the committing Magistrate made a confession affecting himself and five others, and afterwards at the trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge pleaded guilty and was thereupon convicted and sentenced and the Judge then proceeded to take his evidence on solemn affirmation and recorded his confession as evidence in the case against the other prisoners—Held that the Judge was wrong in taking the confession into consideration against those prisoners who pleaded not guilty. The proper course for the Judge was either to have sentenced the prisoner who pleaded guilty and then put him aside or to have waited to see what the evidence would disclose. RZO v KALU PAUL 11 Bom., 148

98 — Amendment of charges—Criminal Procedure Code 1872 s 467—While A and B were being jointly tried before a Court of Session the first for murder and the second for abetment of murder a confession made by A that he himself had committed the murder at the instigation of B was put in as evidence against A. Subsequently the charge against A was altered to one of abetment of murder and the Sessions Judge under the authority of s. 30 of the Evidence Act used the confession against both and convicted them. The High Court held that the original and amended charges were so nearly related that the trial might without any unfairness be deemed to have been a trial on the amended charge from the commencement and that no objection having been taken by B who was represented by a vakeel to the admissibility of A's confession against him when the charge against A was altered the Sessions Judge was justified in using the confession against B also. RZO v GOVIND BABLI PAUL 11 Bom., 278

111. — Confession made by person charged jointly with another for separate offences arising out of one transaction Admissibility of as against the other—In order to constitute an offence under s 3, 3 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be with reference to employment either immediate or at some definite and not very remote future period but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will while still a minor under the age of 16 years be employed for that purpose although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. If the father of two girls twins about a year old sold one of them to K, a prostitute for Rs 9 (and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for Rs 4. A was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy and who was then living with her and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made. K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest and immediately thereafter she was committed to jail for seven days. On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate she retracted her confession and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly. H being charged with an offence under s 372 viz seducing the girls for the purpose of prostitution and K with an offence under s. 373 viz buying for the same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence. Held that having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted it was open to suspicion and could not safely be acted upon and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCE v. KARNIA BAI I L R, 22 Cal 164

112. — Confession of co-prisoner—Joint trial—Plea of guilty—A and B were charged with murder. A pleaded guilty but B was not convicted or sentenced till the conclusion of the trial of his fellow-prisoner B. The Sessions Judge holding that both the accused were jointly tried for the same offence took into consideration against B the confessions made by A and convicted both of murder. Held that after A had pleaded guilty he could not be treated as being jointly tried with B. A's confessions were therefore not admissible.

Against B and r. s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act
(1 of 1872) QUEEN EMRESS & PARVATI

113. Statements of co-accused who pleaded guilty—Joint trial.—Where two out of several persons on their trial in a Court of Session on a joint charge pleaded guilty and made certain statements to the Court it was held that such statements could not be taken into consideration as evidence against the other accused persons inasmuch as after pleading guilty the persons making those statements were no longer on their trial. QUEEN EMRESS & PARVATI I. L. R. 17 All. 524

114. Corroborated in material particulars.—Where the only evidence against two prisoners accused of murder directly implicating them in the commission of the crime consisted of confessional statements made by them before the committing Magistrate which were subsequently retracted and the statements in such confessions were corroborated in material particulars by other evidence on the record—Held that the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction. QUEEN EMRESS & PARVATI I. L. R. 19 Mad. 482

115. Confession of co-accused—Plea of guilty by one.—On the trial of more persons than one jointly for the same offence where one of them pleads guilty the person so pleading is no longer on his trial and cannot be treated as being jointly tried with the others. A confession by that person affecting himself and others cannot therefore be taken into consideration as against such others under s. 30 of the Evidence Act. QUEEN EMRESS & LAKSHMAYYA PANDARAY I. L. R. 22 Mad. 491

116. Confession by one of several persons jointly tried for the same offence—Plea of guilty by person so confessing—Discretion to continue trial after plea of guilty.—The trial of an accused person does not necessarily end if he pleads guilty. Under s. 271 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where an accused pleads guilty the plea shall be recorded and the accused may be convicted thereon but evidence may be taken in some cases as if the plea had been one of not guilty and the case decided upon the whole of the evidence including the accused's plea. When such a procedure is adopted the trial does not terminate with the plea of guilty and therefore a confession by the person so pleading may be taken into consideration under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872 as against any other person who is being jointly tried with him for the same offence. A trial does not strictly end until the accused has been either convicted or acquitted or discharged. QUEEN EMRESS & CHINNA PAVOCHI I. L. R. 23 Mad. 151

117. Confession of co-prisoner who has withdrawn from association for offence.—The confession of a person who says he abetted a murder but withdrew before the actual perpetration of that murder by his association, he used as evidence against those associated with him. The person confessing is tried with them on the charge of murder. REG & AMRITA GUPTA I. L. R. 19 All. 524

118. Effect of Act I of 1872 on confession.—The wording shows that the confession to be an element in the consideration of the case. Unless there is something more a confession will still be a case of no evidence and not a confession. ANONYMOUS 7 M. 10

119. Confession of co-prisoner when admissible against co-prisoner.—Where the confession of one prisoner is admissible against another prisoner with another admissible in evidence against him it must appear that that confession is from a confessing person substantially to the same facts. It implicates the person against whom it is in the commission of the offence. If prisoners are being jointly tried. QUEEN EMRESS & PARVATI I. L. R. 19 Bom. 195

QUEEN & MOHAMED BAKSH I. L. R. 19 Bom. 195

QUEEN & HODHU BAKSH I. L. R. 19 All. 524

121. Un corroborated confession.—A conviction based on a confession of a person who is being tried together with others for the same offence cannot proceed on an un corroborated statement in the confession of other persons. EMRESS OF INDIA & RAM CHAND I. L. R. 19 All. 524

122. Effect of confession of co-prisoner implicating himself.—On the Evidence Act the confession of a person implicating himself and another person charged with the same offence is when duly proved evidence against both but such second person is not convicted on it. Per GASTON C.J.—Such a confession must be dealt with by the Court in the same manner as any other evidence. The weight to be attached to such evidence and the question whether it is sufficient in point of law to justify a conviction is a question for the Court. Un supported by other evidence it is not to be taken as evidence of the very weakest. It is simply a statement of a third person not sworn to or affirmed. If such confession is corroborated by other evidence it is immaterial whether the case at the trial the confession is the other evidence or the other evidence.

Statement of prisoner exculpating himself.—A prisoner charged together with others with being a member of an unlawful assembly made a statement before the committing Magistrate implicating his fellow prisoners and another person. It was not a confession nor did it amount to any admission by the prisoner that he was guilty in any degree of the offence charged; but it was simply an endeavour on his part to explain his own presence on the occasion in such a manner as to exculpate himself and any mention made by him in such a statement of other persons having been engaged in the riot was altogether irrelevant and not evidence against them NOOR BUX KAZI v EMPRESS

Trial for dacoity and receiving stolen property.—A and B were committed for trial the former for dacoity under s. 39 of the Penal Code and the latter under s. 413 for receiving stolen property knowing it to be such. A made two confessions and in both he stated he had handed over to B some pieces of gold and silver stolen at the dacoity. When B was arrested a gold ring and a silver wristlet were found in his possession. At the trial A pleaded guilty and B claimed to be tried. A grildmuth deposed that he had made the ring and wristlet found with B out of pieces of gold and silver given to him for the purpose by B. On this evidence and on the confessions made by A the Sessions Judge convicted B. On appeal to the High Court.—Held that A and B not having been tried jointly for the same offence the confession of A was inadmissible as evidence against B. There was therefore no evidence of the identity of the goods stolen at the dacoity with those found in B's possession and the case against him failed. Conviction quashed EMPRESS v BALA PATEL

A confessed that he had got the coins from B and had passed them to several persons at his request. Held that the confession of A was relevant against B. When two persons are accused of an offence of the same definition arising out of a single transaction the confession of the one may be used against the other though it inculcates himself through acts separable from those ascribed to his accomplice and capable therefore of constituting a separate offence from that of the accomplice. QUEEN EXPRESS & NURA MAHOMED I. and lands as one of the heirs of M K against a defendant who was an heir of M A and who had obtained possession of the houses and lands under the orders passed for the release of the one and the settlement of the other the defendant pleaded that the entire property had come into her possession in 1856 under a gift from M K and that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. Held (first) in respect of the house property that if the defendant was in possession at the time when the proclamations were issued the question of limitation must be decided as if there never had been a confiscation; and (second) in respect of the lands that no question of limitation could arise since the suit was brought within twelve years from the date of the Government order for settlement under which alone any title to the lands could have been acquired by either of the parties. JEHAN KADAR v. ASSUR BANU I. L. R. 4 Cal., 727

2 — Lord Canning's proclamation 1858 Effect of—Re grant of confiscated lands—The effect of Lord Canning's proclamation of the 15th March 1858 was to divest all the landed property from the proprietors in Ouddh and to transfer it to and vest it in the British Government. Consequently all who since that date claim title to such property must claim through the Government. Where a re grant is made to a former owner the new title will depend entirely on the terms of the re grant; and if such re grant is made for life only no suit can be maintained to rectify an alleged mistake and for declaration of an absolute title according to the tenor of the sunnads by which the property was held under the old dynasty and prior to the confiscation. MULKA JEHAN SANIBA v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF LUCKNOW I. L. R. 6 I. A. 63

3 — Property standing and registered in name of one party but admitted to belong to another—Registration for fiscal purposes—In Ouddh before its annexation to the British rule a Rajah was a talukhdar of a large talukh. A younger branch of his family had a separate mehal in the possession of A wholly distinct from and independent of the talukh the Rajah possessed as representing the elder branch of the family. The Ouddh Government for fiscal purposes included A's mehal with the Rajah's talukh so that the Rajah as the elder branch of the family represented A's mehal at the Court at Lucknow notwithstanding that A remained in undisturbed possession as absolute owner paying through the Rajah for his mehal a proportion of the jumma fixed on the talukh. Thus relation between the Rajah and A subsisted up to the time of the annexation of Ouddh by the British Government. While the Government was making a settlement with the land owners and A was about to apply for a distinct settlement of his mehal he and after him his widow was induced by the Rajah not to do so the Rajah in letters fully recognising A's absolute right to the mehal. After the suppression of the rebellion in Ouddh and the Government had recognized the talukhdari tenure with its rights a provisional settlement of the talukh including A's mehal was made with the Rajah but before a sanad was granted to him Government confiscated half his estates for concealment of arms. The Rajah suppressed the fact of the trust relation of the mehal of A and contrived that it should be included in the half part of the estate the Government had confiscated which mehal the Government as a reward granted to Ouddh loyalists. A's widow brought a suit against the Government and the grantees for the restoration of the mehal and for a settlement. The Chief Commissioner held that as the Rajah was the registered owner of the mehal of A included in his talukh it had been properly forfeited. Such finding reversed on appeal on the ground that A was the acknowledged owner of the trust of the Rajah and that A's widow as rightful owner was not affected as between her and the Government by the act of confiscation of half the Rajah's talukh. THEKRAM SOOKRAM KOOBAR v. RAJAH'S TALUKH 14 Moore's I. A. 119

CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY IN ODDH—concluded

4 — Confiscation and restoration of lands in Ouddh in 1858 and of immovables in Lucknow—Gift—Title—On a claim for a share in property consisting of (a) immovables in Lucknow and (b) revenue paying land in a district of Ouddh the defence was title by gift with possession from the former owner a member of the family through which the plaintiff claimed. As to the immovables in Lucknow they having been included in the confiscation which having followed the capture of the town in 1858 was subsequently abandoned without any intention on the part of Government to make a re grant in favour of any person the result in regard to the present question was the same as if no such event had occurred. The other property (b) came under the general confiscation of Ouddh lands in 1858 and also was restored through subsequent settlement operations in which the final order relating to the land in question was to the effect that settlement should be made with the heirs of the previous owner. Held that the above did not preclude the defence of exclusive title by gift the order last mentioned on its true construction only designating all those who might take under and through the previous owner (deceased at the time of settlement) without excluding any claimant save those who might claim adversely to such title. The Government did not in the settlement which followed the confiscation make any arbitrary or wholly new re distribution of estates or proceed as if the existence of previous titles (though they had been brought to an end) was to go for nothing. The enquiry in most cases was as to who would have been entitled had there been no confiscation. As to both classes of property, the gift was maintained. JEHAN KADAR v. ASSUR BANU BHOW I. L. 22 Moral consideration—Promise to pay at majority debt during infancy—Promise to pay barred debt—The general rule of law is that a consideration merely moral is not valuable consideration such as would support a promise But there are instances of enforceable promises which formerly were referred to the now exploded principle of previous moral obligation and which are still held to be binding although that principle has been rejected Amongst those instances is a promise after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy and a promise in renewal of a debt barred by the law of limitation. The efficacy of such promises is now based upon the principle that where the consideration was originally beneficial to the party promising and he be protected from liability by some provision of the statute or common law meant for his advantage he may renounce the benefit of that law and if he promise to pay the debt he is bound by the law to perform that promise.

After marriage D's grand daughter died but owing to defendant a being adopted plaintiff was deprived of all the cherished hopes of his wife's future inheritance. Accordingly the adoptive mother and defendant executed a mosharrah patra in plaintiff's favour promising him in consideration of the above facts a monthly allowance for maintenance. The present suit was to recover a balance due of this allowance. Held that whether the English law was applied or the principles of justice equity and good conscience the deed disclosed a good and sufficient consideration for the promise to pay and defendant was bound to pay the stipulated allowance. SATA NUN DUN ROY v. The contract is one entire contract upon one entire consideration and a contract which was at its commencement based upon a valid consideration cannot become void for want of consideration by any change whatever in the situation of the parties. LEPLA v. GOPAL MUNDOL 17 W. R. 91

28. Appointment of agent—Remedy in case of revocation of authority—Suit for specific performance—The defendant by an agreement in the nature of a letter of attorney constituted the plaintiff and his descendants the hereditary agents of the defendant gave him authority to collect the rents of his share in an imam village and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held that as between the parties and during their lifetime the appointment was valid and binding, whether or not any valuable consideration passed; the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration for the appointment. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly the remedy lay under ordinary circumstances in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where however the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance and demanded arrears of salary—Held that without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover except for work and services actually rendered. IMMURCHAKA v. 31. ———— Uncertified adjustment of decrees—Civil Procedure Code ss 244 (c) 258—Contract Act II of 1872 ss 2 10 23 29
 —The consideration for a mortgage consisted partly of the amount of two decrees held by the mortgagee against the mortgagor. The mortgagee having sued to enforce the mortgage the mortgagor pleaded failure of consideration as a bar to the enforcement of the mortgage. This plea was based on the allegation that the mortgagee had not certified the adjustment of the decrees as provided by s 244 of the Civil Procedure Code and they were still in force under the terms of that section. Per DUNN J that the failure of the mortgagee to certify the adjustment of the decrees did not constitute a failure of consideration because he did not covenant to certify such adjustment and it was not in fact necessary for him to do so because he could not seek execution of the decrees on the ground that though unsatisfied they were still in force under s 248 of the Civil Procedure Code without becoming liable to penalties and because if the mortgagor considered the entering up of the adjustment of the decrees to be imperative he had his remedy by application to the Court in the terms of s 248. Per MAHMOOD J that the adjustment of a decree out of Court if never certified to the Court is under s 248 insufficient only so far as the execution of the decree is concerned that there is nothing in the Contract Act to make such an adjustment invalid as the consideration for an agreement that an agreement founded on such consideration may be enforced without defeating the objects of s 258 and that consequently there was in respect of the amount of the decrees valid consideration for the mortgage. Gunamani Das v. 9. — Refusal to pay money under order of Civil Court.—Imprisonment.—Jurisdiction of High Court.—Civil Procedure Code 1877 ss 341 342.—The decree in an administration suit directed A a party to the suit to pay over a sum of money which she admitted was in her hands to her own attorney in the suit to be applied by him as directed by the decree. A refused to pay over the money and she was imprisoned for disobedience to the Court's order. After she had been in prison for six months she applied to the Judge of the Court below under s 341 of the Civil Procedure Code to be discharged. This order was refused. Held on appeal that the proceeding in which A had been imprisoned was not in execution of a decree but that she was imprisoned under process of contempt and that the provisions of ss 341 and 342 did not apply to the case. PER WHITE J—The jurisdiction of the High Court to imprison for contempt is a jurisdiction that it has inherited from the old Supreme Court and was conferred upon that Court by the Charters of the Crown which invested it with all the powers and authority of the then Court of King's Bench and of the High Court of Chancery in Great Britain and this jurisdiction has not been removed or affected by the Civil Procedure Code. MARTIN v LAWRENCE

The Magistrate having found that the statement was incorrect and that the accused could have produced the documents in question charged him with having committed an offence under s. 175 of the Penal Code and himself tried and convicted him. Held that neither s. 477, 480 nor s. 485 (which sections provide for the only cases in which a Court other than a High Court etc. can try persons for offences committed before itself) was applicable to the case and the Magistrate was therefore precluded by s. 487 from trying the case. QUEEN EMPRESS v. SETHIAIAH

It does not appear from the statement of the case whether or not the offence was committed in view or presence of the Court and taken cognizance of the same day. From the judgment it would appear that it was not and this must form the ground for the decision for offences under s. 175 of the Penal Code are expressly mentioned in s. 480 of the Criminal Procedure Code and if committed in view or presence of the Court and taken cognizance of the same day the Magistrate would apparently have had clear power to try the offence and convict the accused as he did.

of recital in regard to control over operative words

—The parties during several years had transactions consisting of the deliveries of produce by the defendants to the plaintiff's agent under advances upon separate contracts specifying prices and of consignments by the defendants through the plaintiffs. A purchase account and an interest account kept between them resulted in a general account and in 1872 a large sum was due thereon to the plaintiffs to whom in 1873 the defendants sent letters mortgaging property with instruments of title accompanying. In the beginning of 1874 the parties entered into a written agreement which described the balance due in respect of previous advances as the block account comprising also an interest account and the transactions proceeded. The intention was shown that the advances should be liquidated by returns but the only date mentioned from which an inference could be drawn as to the intended duration of the arrangement between the parties show at 30th June 1875. In this suit brought in December 1875 it was contended that the right construction of the agreement of 1874 required that it should continue to subsist (unless rescinded either by mutual agreement or on breach of its stipulations by one party justifying its rescission by the other) until the liquidation of the balance by returns at all events as regarded the block account. In order to the working of an agreement for a liquidation in such a way it would have been necessary to imply obligations for which no express provision had been made nothing for instance having been fixed as to the extent or duration of the business or as to the rates at which produce was to be offered or accepted. Held that such provisions could not now be supplied and that the stipulations as to the block account were binding only during the continuance of the arrangement for the conduct of the business by the parties such arrangement being terminable at will after the 30th June 1875. The letters of 1873 and the documents of title deposited with them were held to constitute a security for the general balance due from the defendants to the plaintiffs and not only a security for advances on certain of the contracts referred

10 — Delivery by instalments—Tender—Abandonment of excess—Sale of goods— A contract made between the plaintiffs and the defendant stipulated for the delivery to the defendant of 200 bags of Madras Coast castor seed which were to be shipped per steamer and then stated that shipment of 200 bags was to be made in December. On the 12th December 1890 a steamer arrived by steamer Shahjehan and notice in writing was given to the defendant who requested that the delivery might be postponed owing to his not having got down from. On the 14th December the defendant refused to take the 1800 bags on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 200 bags but only the whole at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 200 bags which was refused and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1800 bags. On the 18th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags the balance of the 200 of the December shipment were due on the 18th and they did arrive on the 19th but were refused by the defendant on the same ground as before and they were accordingly resold by the plaintiffs. Held that according to the terms of the contract there was a legal and proper tender of the December shipment by the plaintiffs and that the defendant having committed a breach of the contract in not accepting the bags the plaintiffs were justified in reselling them at once and suing for damages. SIMSON v. 11 — Delivery order for goods deliverable monthly—Sub contract—Tender—Repudiation of contract—Damages— The defendant entered into a contract with the Union Mills for the purchase of 90,000 gunny bags at Rs 21 8 per 100 bags delivery from October to March, each month 15,000 bags. Subsequently the defendant contracted to sell to the plaintiffs these 90,000 bags at Rs 24 2 per 100 bags delivery from October to March 15,000 each month buyers to pay difference cash against delivery order on Mills. In August the defendant made out in the plaintiffs favour a delivery order directing the mills to deliver 90,000 bags on receiving payment for the same at Rs 21 8 per 100 bags and on the same day sent to the plaintiffs a bill showing the amount of difference payable to him by them. The plaintiffs refused the delivery order on the ground that it had not been accepted by the mills but on a subsequent tender of the order and bill they offered on the 5th September to pay the amount of difference on receiving a delivery order accepted by the mills. The defendant treated the contract as at end and sold the bags in the market. In a suit for damages—Held (1) at the defendant sold not only a delivery order but the right to obtain from

12 — Shipment at monthly intervals—Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 39— The defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs 120 cases of condensed milk which were to be shipped in London and delivered in Madras. The agreement stipulated for shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals but it contained a proviso whereby the plaintiffs were excused from monthly shipments if space in ships sailing for Madras were not available. The second shipment was not made within one month from the date of the first shipment thereupon the defendant repudiated the contract. Held (1) that the interval of time contemplated in the contract was one month more or less regard being had to the time which it might be reasonable to allow to the plaintiffs for finding a steamer available for the required shipment (2) that the plaintiffs having failed to make the second shipment by a steamer of which they might have availed themselves the defendant was justified in rescinding the contract. YOLKART BROTHERS v. 13 — Delivery in whole of November on seven days notice from buyer—Breach of contract— A contract for delivery by the defendants to the plaintiff of 1,000 bags of ginger stated that delivery was to be taken and given in the whole of November on seven days notice from the buyer. On the 5th November the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants requiring delivery to be given within seven days and again on the 11th that he was prepared to take delivery on the following day. On the 12th the defendants wrote to the plaintiff stating that they would give delivery on the 18th 29th and 30th November. On the 15th the plaintiff gave notice that he considered the contract at an end. In a suit for damages for non delivery—Held (affirming the decision of the Court below) that the words on seven days notice from the buyer were intended to give the buyer the right of fixing the particular time in November at which the delivery was to commence and that the defendants were therefore bound to commence delivery on the expiration of the seven days notice. JUGGERNATH KHAN v. adding in a postscript that the steamer would be ready to load on or about the 12th instant The SS County of York arrived in Bombay on the 10th June but from unforeseen circumstances had not a berth in the dock and was not ready to load until the 23rd instant In the meantime on the 15th June the defendant repudiated the contract on the ground that having been led by the plaintiffs to expect that the ship would be ready to load on the 12th instant he had made telegraphic arrangements on that fact and the ship not being ready he was compelled to ship his goods by other steamers in order to fulfill his engagements The plaintiffs accordingly refiled the freight on defendant's account and brought this suit for the loss incurred in so doing Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed for that nothing had occurred to alter the original contract which gave them the whole of June in which to provide a steamer The statement made by the plaintiffs on the 3rd of June (in answer to the defendant's enquiries as to the probable date of the arrival of the steamer) that the steamer would be ready to load on or about the 12th instant was not a promise but a mere expression of opinion The question of estoppel did not arise On the 22nd June the plaintiffs gave their shippers amongst others the defendant a notice to the following effect As the County of York will be in dock tomorrow ready to receive cargo we have to request that your cargo be down not later than Wednesday the 24th instant etc etc Quere — Whether this was a "notice that the steamer was ready for cargo" as required by the contract BERRY CRAIG & Co & MARTIN I L R 18 Bom. 599 in 1891 at intervals of four weeks. He also admitted that the shipment on the 9th December 1890 was a late shipment and that he was not there for it and that he did not give the order for the contract. As to the last contents of the plaintiffs' alleged that by the custom of Bombay in the case of contracts made with members of the Native Produce Goods Association the date of the carrier's receipt was to be regarded as the date of shipment and that under such a contract as the one in question delivery to the Railway Company or other inland carrier was equivalent to shipment. This custom it was alleged originated in consequence of the above Association having agreed that all piece goods ordered out by its members should be conveyed to Bombay by certain lines of steamers only and by no others. It was stated that this custom existed in it would in many instances be impossible for Bombay merchants to carry out their contracts as no steamers of the selected lines would be available. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at the hearing found that the alleged custom existed and was generally accepted and undertaken by merchants and dealers in Bombay. On reference to the High Court—Held that the contract finally agreed on was that 200 bales of cotton to be shipped in the manner and at the times mentioned in the document of the 24th September 1890. SMITH v. 18 ——— Sale of goods—Non acceptance of goods—Contract for goods to be ordered from Europe—Performance of contract by offer of goods of same description not ordered out for purchasers but bought by vendors in Bombay.—On the 7th August the defendants commissioned the plaintiffs to order out from Europe 500 cwt copper braziers September shipment assorted in the manner set out in the indent signed by the defendants free on board Bombay harbour at the rate of £ 30 per ton. On the same day the plaintiffs sent a reply to the defendants' order in their usual form partly lithographed and partly written as follows—

We have the pleasure to inform you that we have received a telegram from our Manchester friends and so far as regards the cylinders therein used we learn that they advise the following purchases which will be invoiced to you at your limit subject to confirmation by letter as usual. Order this day hundred bundles of copper braziers at £55 per ton free on board Bombay. As a fact however no telegram had been received from the plaintiffs' Manchester friends and the plaintiffs had not learned that they had advised the purchases referred to in their reply. The acceptance of the plaintiffs' offer was really based on the plaintiffs' view of the probabilities of the copper market. The agents in England were unable to carry out the order and it remained unexecuted. On the 26th October the plaintiffs having negotiated with one Nara Ducha to take over from him a September shipment of copper by the SS Merton Hall answering to the defendants' order and for the purpose of fulfilling it wrote to the defendants as follows—

We beg to inform you of the arrival of the SS Merton Hall with hundred packages of goods sold to you as per agreement No 213 and have therefore to request payment of the cash for those goods according to the terms of the agreement. The plaintiffs' negotiations however with Nara Ducha fell through and they were unable to supply the defendants with the goods from the Merton Hall. The defendants on the 30th October wrote through their solicitors to the plaintiffs stating that they believed the goods never came to Bombay and that they considered the contract at an end. The plaintiffs however on the 29th October had succeeded in purchasing a September shipment of goods from one Beg. Mahomed corresponding to those ordered by the defendants. They then on the 31st October wrote to the defendants informing them that it was a mistake of their clerk to advise the arrival of the defendants' goods per Merton Hall and handing the defendants' invoice of 100 bundles arrived ex Ta'an Head. The defendants discovered that the plaintiffs had not ordered out these goods but had purchased them in Bombay and on that ground they refused to accept them. The price of copper had then fallen. The plaintiffs sold the goods by auction and brought this suit against the defendants to recover the difference between the price realized by the sale and the price which by their contract the defendants had agreed to pay. It was admitted by the plaintiffs' witnesses that it was intended at the time the defendants gave their order that the goods should be ordered out from England by the plaintiffs and that this was the invariable course of business of the plaintiffs' firm—the present case forming the only instance to the contrary. Held that the defendants were not bound to accept the goods offered by the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the amount sued for. An importing firm which accepts a commission to order out goods at a fixed rate and undertakes that they shall be issued to the person giving the order at that rate does not (in the absence of proof of usage to the contrary) fulfil his contract by obtaining goods answering to the terms of the order from another firm in Bombay and tendering them to the person giving the order. BOMBAY UNITED MERCHANTS COMPANY v. *Suit for non delivery—Agreement exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Necessity for declaring name of carrying ship to purchaser—Loss of ship W/ at is a July August shipment What amounts to—*The defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiff 500 tons of coal per steamer July August shipment. The last clause of the agreement was as follows—In the event of the ship being lost this contract to be null and void. The coal was put on board the SS Rubens by the defendants at Sunderland on the 30th and 31st August. On the 1st September the Rubens was sunk by collision in dock and remained at the bottom in twenty three feet of water for sixteen hours when she was raised and her cargo discharged. The coal was pronounced unfit for a voyage to Bombay. Extensive repairs to the ship were found necessary and she was useless until the 6th October. The plaintiff sued for damages for non delivery of the coal. The defendants relied on the last clause of the agreement as exempting them from liability. Held that the defendants were not liable. The Rubens was lost for the purpose for which she was required under the contract: for a voyage in fulfilment of a July August shipment and the defendants having proved that the coal had been duly shipped on board the vessel so lost were exempt under the last clause of the agreement from liability for non delivery. It was argued that until the name of the carrying ship was declared to the plaintiff as purchaser neither the ship nor the coal was assigned to the contract and therefore the loss could not be within the contract. Held that if such a condition was intended it should have been expressed. The appropriation of certain goods to the contract by the vendors (the defendants) the placing them on board the Rubens and doing all in their power to despatch them to Bombay in fulfilment of the contract were enough to entitle them to the protection of the last clause of the agreement. 20 — Contract to sell from 2 500 to 3 500 tons of coal—Breach of contract—Non delivery of coal—Damages—On the 18th May 1893 the defendants sold to the plaintiffs the entire cargo of coal per steam ship — May shipment via canal amounting to 2 500 to 3 500 tons or thereabouts. The defendants intended a certain steam ship called the Ethelaida which carried a cargo of 3 335 tons of coal to satisfy this contract. This ship however did not load in May and consequently her cargo did not fulfil the condition of the contract. From the day of making the contract the plaintiffs had been urging the defendants to declare the name of the vessel in which the coal contracted for was to be shipped. On the 14th June the defendants by letter informed the plaintiffs that the vessels chartered for their May shipment had not loaded in May and they offered to cancel the contract. On the same day however and about an hour after the plaintiffs had received this letter and before they had replied to it the defendants sent them another letter as follows — We have now been informed that the coal our coals have been loaded in is the Ethelaida and we now beg to declare it. Correspondence subsequently passed between the parties. On the 15th June the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants as follows — I enclose to you finally what you intend in case the Ethelaida is declared as bringing coals as to us under a contract of 18th May please let us know the date of her sailing London and the particular date of her arrival in Bombay and also how much coal she has on board. On the following day the defendants replied. The Ethelaida is the boat chartered for the cargo we sold you. We do not positively know whether she commenced to load in May or June. She was expected to load about 3 300 tons. On the 28th June the defendants wrote definitely stating that the Ethelaida did not load in May. The plaintiffs refused her cargo and sent in a statement of their alleged loss calculated upon 3 300 tons the amount stated to be the cargo of the Ethelaida in the defendants letter of the 14th June. Held that the damages must be calculated upon a cargo of 2 500 tons only. The Ethelaida was never incorporated into the contract. The defendants declared her against the contract but after they had informed the plaintiffs that she had not loaded in May the plaintiffs refused her cargo. The contract which the defendants failed to fulfil was a contract to deliver the Ethelaida cargo which they were always ready and willing to deliver. The option rested with the defendants whether they would deliver 2 500 or 3 500 tons or any intermediate quantity and upon no principle could the Court exercise that option for them and declare that they were liable to deliver more than a cargo of 2 000 tons. 21. — Suit for non delivery—Clause exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Loss of ship—Declaration of it after date of loss—Appropriation of goods after goods lost—The defendants by a contract dated 10th January 1896 sold 2 500 tons of coal to the plaintiffs of the February and March shipment to be delivered in Bombay. No ship was named in the contract which contained the following clause — In the event of the ship being lost this contract shall be null and void. February and March shipments ordinarily arrive in Bombay on or before the 30th April following. All of the coal contracted for was duly delivered by the defendants except 136 tons which still remained to be delivered to the plaintiffs. By a letter dated 20th April 1896 addressed to the plaintiffs the defendants declared the S. S. Eastby Abbey as the ship carrying the said 136 tons of coal remaining due under the contract. There was no evidence of any appropriation of coal on board the Eastby Abbey to the purpose of the above contract prior to this declaration. It subsequently transpired that the Eastby Abbey had run on a reef in the Red Sea on the 16th April and so seriously damaged that being taken to Suez (where such of her cargo as had not been thrown overboard was) she was found unable to proceed to Bombay and she returned to England for repairs. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for non delivery of 136 tons of coal. The defendants pleaded that the ship having been lost they were exempt from liability under the clause in the contract. Held that the defendants were liable for the non-delivery of the coal. There having been previously to the declaration of the ship no appropriation of the coal on board to the purpose of the contract the exemption clause did not apply. Semble—In case of a contract containing a clause exemption clause as the one in question the declaration of a ship so as thereby to appropriate goods on board to the purposes of the contract is useless if made after the ship has been lost whether the fact of the loss is known to the declarant or not. DADA BHAI HOMTESHI DECHER & KHAMBATTA

22. — Continuing offer—Successive contracts—Reasonable notice—Offer—The plaintiffs were the agents of two mills in Bombay. The defendants were a coal company carrying on business in Bombay by their agents the Bombay Company Limited. The defendants on the 19th of August 1897 signed a memorandum in the form of a letter addressed to the plaintiffs of which the first two clauses were as follows:—The undersigned have this day made a contract with Messrs. Homay Wadia & Co. for a period of twelve months from 1st September 1897 to 31st August 1898. Sellers to supply them with Bengal Coal Co. & Desborough from time to time as required by purchasers, not a notice to be given of such requirements. The total quantity indented for during the year shall not exceed without seller's consent the maximum average of 3,000 tons per month. Up to the 16th July 1898 the plaintiffs had indented for 1,232 tons of which 1,000 tons had been delivered. On that date they indented for 600 tons more. On the 19th July the plaintiffs further indented for an additional 1,000 tons. The defendants replied stating to deliver 600 tons in August but declining to deliver 1,000 tons. The plaintiffs on the 2nd July gave notice to the defendants that they would require delivery of the balance = 2,048 tons (that is, 4,300 minus 1,500 tons already delivered) on or before the 31st August 1898. The defendants subsequently delivered 200 and 1,000 tons leaving 1,948 tons undelivered. The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 600-13-0 as damages for non-delivery. Held that the memorandum of the 19th August 1897 was not a contract but simply a continuing offer and that each successive order given by the plaintiffs was an acceptance of the offer as to the quantity ordered. The offer of the defendants and each successive order of the plaintiffs constituted a series of contracts. The failure alleged was not to comply with orders given after the defendant's offer was cancelled and withdrawn. Held further that plaintiffs were not entitled to obtain more than 3,000 tons in any one month with the defendants' consent. Held further that the two orders given by the plaintiffs on the 2nd and 19th July 1898 to supply 2,048 tons was a reasonable notice within the meaning of the memorandum of the 19th August 1897. LYGAL COAL CO. v. defendant an indent containing certain terms not contained in the original offer and in particular containing the word "Free Bombay Harbour and interest." This the defendant refused to sign. The plaintiffs however sent the offer by cable to their home firm and on receipt of a favourable reply communicated this acceptance to the defendant. It is acceptance the defendant said he had returned. The plaintiffs denied that he had done so. Held per JESKINS C.J.—The law on this point is thus formulated in the most authoritative mode by the Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 7. In order to convert a proposal into a promise the acceptance must be absolute and unqualified. That is to say until there is such an acceptance the stage of negotiation has not been passed and no legal obligation is imposed. Similarly any departure from the terms of the offer or any qualification vitiates the acceptance it accompanies unless it is agreed to by the person from whom the offer comes. In other words an acceptance with a variation is no acceptance; it is simply a counter-proposal which must be accepted by the original promisor before a contract is made. Held further that because the acceptance was not shown to have been returned no inference could be drawn that the defendant must have assented to the terms in which it failed to correspond to his offer. It is clear that a person making a proposal cannot impose on the party to whom it is addressed the obligation to refuse it under the penalty of imputed assent or attach to his silence the legal result that he must be deemed to have accepted it. Evidence of previous dealings is admissible only for the purpose of explaining the terms used in a contract and not to impose on a party an obligation as to which the contract is silent or to read into it a liability which would otherwise not exist. It was impossible to find in dealings carried out on the basis of signed indents any clue to the intention of the parties when it only was no indent signed but the defendant refused to sign one. MAHOMED HAJI JIVA & SINGER exchange for the goods. Held that, F not having had an opportunity of inspecting the goods as provided by the contract the tender made as aforesaid by P was not such an offer of performance of the contract as F was bound to accept. Held also that F was not bound to accept a tender of railway receipts for goods subject (as some of these were) to demurrage nor for goods on which freight had not been paid (as was the case with some of these goods) nor for goods that were not available on the 31st May as in the present case. In order to establish a valid tender of the goods it was for P to show that had P taken the railway receipts the railway company would have been bound to deliver the goods upon production of the receipts and F was under no duty to point out to P that the tender was defective. F's duty under the contract arose when a sufficient tender was made to him and not till then. Failure to justify an alleged breach of contract upon one ground only which is found insufficient does not disentitle the defendant to rely upon other grounds which his rights under the contract entitle him to rely upon. Cowan v Milbarn L R 2 Exch 230 and Mothoormohun Roy v Bank of Bengal I L R 3 Calo, 392 referred to MOTICHAND v FULCHAND I L R 26 Calo 142 [3 C W N 116]

way receipts for goods subject to freight—Railway receipts for goods subject to demurrage—Defective tender—Estoppel.—Under a contract of sale of goods it was provided that if instead of the goods railway receipts for them be tendered they must be handed over to the buyers 48 hours before the goods were liable to demurrage under the present term of 72 hrs granted by the railway company that sellers must be present at the time of delivery to inspect the weighing and sampling and in their default buyers will weigh and sample and sellers must abide by the result. On the last day of delivery the plaintiffs tendered to the defendants certain railway receipts purporting to cover the goods under the contract and blank endorsed by the consignee named in the receipts and demanded payment of the goods they did not offer to give delivery of the goods covered by the receipts. The defendants refused to accept the railway receipts until they were endorsed by the consignee named in them to the plaintiff and by the plaintiff to the defendants. It was subsequently found that freight had not been paid on the receipts and that demurrage was payable on some of the goods but the defendants did not at the time raise any objection on that ground. Held that having regard to the terms of the contract the defendants were not bound to accept the railway receipts or upon their being tendered to pay the price of the goods as demanded. That the plaintiffs had not complied with the terms of the clause relating to delivery by railway receipts and it was open to the defendants to rely upon that objection and they cannot be said to have waived all questions as to freight demurrage and the tendering of railway receipts instead of the goods

29 — Collateral agreement—Contract Act ss 21 63—Mistake of law—Agreement to secure repayment of loan collateral to primary obligation.—By an agreement in writing defendants trustees of a temple in consideration of an advance of money which they represented was required to pay off debts incurred for the benefit of the temple granted to plaintiff a lease of the right to manage the temple lands and plaintiff promised that he would repay himself out of the profits to be derived from the lands and that neither the defendants nor their family property should be made liable for the debt. In a suit by plaintiff against a tenant of the temple lands this lease was held to be void for illegality. Defendants subsequently resumed management and plaintiff sued them to recover the money advanced by him. It was found that the agreement was entered into by both parties under a mistake as to the validity of the lease. Held that assuming s 65 of the Contract Act was not intended to vary the rule that a mistake of law is no ground for relieving a party from his own contract plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover on the ground that the agreement which provided for repayment was collateral and had failed. An agreement that an obligation which is contracted shall be discharged in some particular mode is collateral to the primary contract which created the obligation though the two agreements may be mixed up in one contract. KRISHNAN v SANKARA VARMA I L R 9 Mad. 441

The defendants pleaded that the mortgages made were not in violation of the provisions of the machalka. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the Civil Judge considered the provisions—Moreover we are only entitled to cultivate the said four villages and to maintain the said choultry with the income therefrom as above stated and we have no right to alienate the said lands by sale etc.—fatal to the right to mortgage advanced by the defendants one to five. Accordingly he reversed the decree appealed from. Held by SCOTLAND C.J. that the reasonable construction to be put upon that portion of the razmama relating to alienation was that the villages were not to be alienated so as to deprive the choultry of the receipt of the portion of the produce fixed by the razmama for its support that the security of the cultivation of the land and the application of the fixed portion of the produce to the maintenance of the choultry was all that the parties intended to effect, that there was nothing in the record to

38. — Demurrage—Sale of cargo by consignees—Several purchasers—Contract incorporating the charter party—Liability of one purchaser for delay of all—Contract absolute—On the 2nd June 1898 the defendant entered into two contracts with the plaintiffs the consignees of the cargo each for the purchase of 500 tons of coal per S.S. Dunedin then in harbour. The contracts provided (inter alia) delivery to be taken at a rate of not less than 200 tons per day. All conditions in the charter party to be binding on the purchaser. The charter party stated cargo to be discharged whether permuting at the average rate of not less than 300 tons a working day or to pay demurrage at the rate of £30 per working day or pro rata. Previously to the 2nd of June the rest of the cargo had been sold by the plaintiffs to three other purchasers and the lay days had already partially expired but as regards neither of these facts did the defendants ask nor were they given information. The Dunedin discharged at only three of her four hatches and so discharging was able to give delivery of something more than 300 but less than 400 tons a day. Delivery was given to whichever of the four purchasers was the first to come alongside. At the expiration of the lay days (being the days required to discharge the whole cargo at the average rate of 300 tons a day) the cargo had been completely discharged with the exception of 254 tons which remained to be delivered to the defendant. The cargo to be discharged subsequently to 2nd of June would have been discharged within the lay days but for the want of lighters on the part of the purchasers of the cargo generally. It occasionally happened however that a lighter was kept idle waiting for its turn at one of the three hatches. The plaintiffs paid one day's demurrage in respect of the delay in discharging the 254 tons and now brought an action to recover the same from the defendant. Held that the defendant was liable. The contract of the defendant (by incorporation of the charter party) to take delivery within the lay days or to pay demurrage being absolute he could only excuse non-performance of his contract by showing it was due either to default of the captain of the ship or of the plaintiffs themselves neither of which had been shown. The plaintiffs were not to blame for any difficulties occurring by reason of there being other purchasers. That was the well known nature of the trade and it was for the defendant if he desired protection in this respect so provide for it in his contract. Neither were the plaintiffs bound to be able to deliver to the defendant at the rate of 400 tons a day under his two contracts. The stipulation in each of the two contracts that delivery should be taken at a rate of not less than 200 tons per diem was not one on which the defendant could insist but was an independent stipulation in favour of the cargo. *VOLKART BROTHERS v. 40. — Goods ordered through commission agents—Contract of agency—Contract of sale—Form of action—The defendants traded in Bombay as merchants and commission agents under the style of S. D. & Co. being a branch of a French firm trading in Paris under the same name of which firm also the defendants were members. The Paris firm were agents for certain manufacturers of zinc. The plaintiff a Bombay merchant ordered out 48 casks of zinc sheets through the defendants firm in Bombay by an indent in the following form— I hereby request you to instruct your agents to purchase for me (if possible) the under mentioned goods on my account and risk upon the terms stated below. Such terms inter alia limited the price of the goods and the time within which the shipments were to be made. Later the plaintiff consented to increase his limit of price. The defendants, having communicated with their Paris firm wrote to the plaintiff as follows— We have the pleasure to inform you that our home firm has reported by wire concerning your esteemed order as follows— Placed at your increased limit. Subsequently the plaintiff was informed by the defendants that the manufacturers being full with orders the zinc sheets would not be ready for shipment as soon as had been expected and he was asked whether he agreed to give an extension of time or desired to cancel the indent. Simultaneously the plaintiff wrote that the contract time had been exceeded and that he would buy similar goods in Bombay on the defendants account. Thus the plaintiff did and brought this action to recover the difference in price as damages on account of the defendants having failed to perform their contract for the delivery of 48 casks of zinc sheets. Held that neither the defendants nor their Paris firm had entered into any contract of sale on which they were liable to the plaintiff. 41. — Agreement for permission to quarry—License non-renewal of—Implied condition.—By an agreement (in renewal of similar agreements for the two previous years) dated the 3rd September 1888 the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff rent for a piece of hilly ground at the rate of Rs29 per month for one year during which time the defendant was to be allowed to blast stones and carry on the work of quarrying to the extent of seven crow bars, such quarrying to be done at such places as the plaintiff had pointed out or should choose to point out from time to time. The rent to be paid was arrived at on a calculation of Rs17 per crow-bar and was to be payable whether defendant employed the seven crow bars or less. The defendant by the sixth clause of the agreement further undertook as follows:—“As regards the police arrangement and other expenses at the time of blasting stones, and obtaining an order or license etc and as to any other kind of expense, risk and responsibility all these are upon me. I will duly pay you at the rate of Rs29 per month clear until the fixed time. The defendant was a stone contractor and had been employed in this work of quarrying all his life and for the previous two years on this very spot, and was well aware that blasting could not be carried on without a license from the authorities which was revocable at any time, and required renewal annually. At the time of the agreement the defendant was in possession of a license which expired on the 31st December 1888. After that date the authorities refused to renew the license on the ground that the quarry where operations were being carried on was surrounded by houses on all sides and the defendant thereupon refused to continue the payment of the monthly rent of Rs29. The plaintiff accordingly brought this suit in the Small Cause Court for three months’ rent at the above rate. Held looking at the nature of the contract, that it must be taken to have been the intention of the parties to it that the monthly sum of Rs29 should only be payable so long as quarrying was permitted by the authorities and that there was no unconditional contract to pay Rs29 in all events in cl. 6 of the agreement or elsewhere. *Taylor v Caldwell 3 B and S 508 32 L. needed with the person with whom a contract is made form a material element of the contract, it may well be that such a contract on that ground alone is one which cannot be assigned without the promisor’s consent so as to entitle the assignee to sue him on it. Stevens v Benson 1 K and J., 188 referred to. By an agreement in writing dated 13th December 1882 and executed in favour of M D and H D, who were the proprietors of an indigo concern, the defendant R agreed to sow indigo, taking the seed and lands from M D and H D’s concern, on four bighas of land out of his holding selected, measured, and prepared by M D and H D or their amah; and when the indigo was fit for weeding “to weed, reseed, and turn it up to the extent necessary according to the directions of the amah of the concern,” and when the indigo was fit for reaping “to reap and bind it on carts according to the directions of the amah of the concern; and if any portion of the amah of the land” was in the judgment of the amah of the concern found bad, in lieu thereof to get some other land in his holding measured, and “on the land so measured in Byasack” to sow Bhadon crops only which will be reaped in Bhadar. The defendant also agreed not to sow on the land measured any crop that might “cause obstacle to the cultivation of the indigo, and, if he did so, “the amah of the concern should be at liberty to destroy such crop,” and he should not “oppose the destruction thereof nor sue in the Courts, Civil or Criminal for destruction of the same.” As regards a breach of any condition, it was provided “If I or my heirs depart from the conditions of this indigo engagement directly or indirectly or in any way neglect to cultivate or do not cultivate indigo, I or they shall pay to the above named M D and H D damages for the same from my or their person and property and shall raise no plea or objection. In 1886, M D and H D assigned the entire benefit of this agreement to the plaintiff. It was held by the plaintiff against the defendant for a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for damages on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for the plaintiff’s concern in accordance with the terms of the agreement of the 13th December 1882.—Held that the agreement must be construed as one which had been entered into by the defendant with reference to the personal position, circumstances, and qualifications of M D and H D and their amah; and that therefore it was not assignable so as to give the assignee a right to sue upon it in his own name as for a breach of contract. TOOMAY v RAMJI CAH I. defendant should pay her annually Rs. in lieu of her income from that bazar. Plaintiff also undertook that as long as this annual payment was continued she would not establish any new bazar within two miles of the bazar of the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiff sold the site of her former bazar together with some other land. Held that if the payee it was to be made in consideration of her abolishing the bazar she was not entitled to it after she had parted with the land upon which the bazar stood. That if the payment was in consideration of the plaintiff undertaking not to establish a new bazar within two miles of the defendant's bazar she had disentitled herself to a continuance of the payment from the time when she made it impossible for herself to secure the fulfilment of the condition by parting with the land. SARAT MOHINI DAS v. 44. — Consideration—Compromise of a bond fide claim—Good consideration—Agreement to lend money on mortgage—Delay in completion of agreement—Subsequent agreement to pay interest from a certain date—Consideration for such agreement—Right to rescind—Time of essence of contract—Suit by lender against borrower.—On 31st August 1891 the plaintiff agreed to lend the defendant Rs 30,000 on a mortgage. By the agreement the mortgagor (defendant) was to clear the title and the time fixed for completion of the agreement was eight days from its date. The mortgage was not completed within the stipulated time in consequence of the non production of the title-deeds by prior mortgagees who were to be paid off out of the money to be advanced by the plaintiff. On the 9th September 1891 the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendant reminding him that the time for completion had expired and stating that the plaintiff would require interest to be paid on the money which he had with him lying idle on the defendant's account. On the 24th September 1891 the plaintiff formally tendered the Rs 30,000 to the defendant but as no mortgage deed was then ready for execution the money was not then paid. The plaintiff was always ready and willing to advance the money but in consequence of the defendant's delay he insisted on interest being paid from the 24th September 1891. The title deeds were ultimately produced at the end of November or the beginning of December and on 7th December 1891 the draft mortgage was sent to the defendant for approval. It contained a clause stipulating for payment of interest from 24th September 1891. On the 9th December 1891 the plaintiff had an interview with the defendant. The two points then discussed were (1) what time after due date should be allowed to the defendant (mortgagor) for payment of interest. (2) whether interest on the principal sum should run from the 24th September 1891. On the first point the plaintiff gave way allowing defendant fifteen days instead of eight as originally provided. As to the second point he declined to advance the money unless interest was paid from the 24th September 1891. The defendant ultimately agreed to this. The mortgage-deed was duly engrossed with a stipulation for payment of interest from the 24th September 1891 and the 26th January 1892 was fixed as the day for execution. On that day however one of the defendant's daughters who had to execute the deed was absent and the plaintiff refused to advance the money until her signature was obtained. Subsequently the defendant refused to sign the deed on the ground that it contained the clause for payment of interest from 24th September 1891. He contended that he was not liable to pay interest from that date. The plaintiff brought this suit claiming Rs 1,865 12-0 as damages for the defendant's breach of agreement. The lower Court held that although the original agreement of 31st August 1891 mentioned no date from which interest should run the defendant on the 9th December 1891 had agreed to pay it from 24th September 1891 and had made no objection on the point until February 1892. The defendant contended that if such an agreement was made on the 9th December 1891 it was without consideration but the Court held that the plaintiff was at that date at liberty to rescind the agreement altogether and that he had consented not to rescind in consideration of being paid interest from the 24th December 1891. The lower Court accordingly passed a decree for the plaintiff. Semble—That time was not of the essence of the contract but held that in any case under the circumstances there was a valid ratification of the agreement made by the defendant to pay interest from the 24th September. The plaintiff clearly regarded himself as entitled to rescind and at the defendant's request agreed to forbear to do so if the defendant would consent to pay interest from 24th September 1891. The claim of the right to rescind was undoubtedly a real one and made in good faith and the forbearance to enforce it might well be an inducement to the defendant to agree to the plaintiff's terms and the principle laid down in *Miles v. The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before the 1st December 1881. The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant these contracts being on terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. In a suit to recover damages for breach of the contract by the defendant in not accepting the goods—Held that the stipulation not to sell the goods to others itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept the goods and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages. CARLISLES NEPHEWS & CO v RICKNATH BUCKTHAMULL

56. —Averment of readiness and willingness—Covenant dependent or independent*—The plaintiff and defendants entered into the following agreement dated 26th January 18.1. Under the bond executed to J M by B on the 9th October 1849 for Rs 252 13 the balance left due by him in the matter of the jaggery which he undertook to supply to you Rs 1360 remain due on this date to the exclusion of what has been paid for the amount of principal and interest for this balance you have obtained by purchase the virthi land possessed by B in Sitaparam Agraharam and the half virthi of land of his elder brother. Under such circumstances we hereby agree to pay you out of the said amount Rs 680 within the end of May in the current year and the remaining Rs 680 within the end of May of the ensuing year 1853 and then to get the said deeds of sale endorsed by you and the 1/2 virthi of land put into our possession as purchased by us. We will therefore pay the said amount of Rs 680 in two instalments and take back this sum along with the deeds of sale endorsed. In a suit for recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due under the agreement—Held that on the true construction of the contract it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to deliver or aver readiness to deliver the land to the defendants. The question whether covenants are dependent or independent or whether a certain act is or is not a condition precedent is entirely one of construction and to be determined in each case by edging the intention of the parties from the language they have used. YOUNG v. carried by two companies—Plaintiff delivered a certain quantity of jute to the India General Steam Navigation Company at Serajunge for delivery at the Eastern Bengal Railway Company's station at Sealdah and it was arranged by the bill of lading (the contract in the case) that the freight from Serajunge to Sealdah should be payable to the Eastern Bengal Railway Company at Sealdah and it was so paid upon the delivery of the goods. A portion of the jute was not delivered and this suit having been brought against the Eastern Bengal Railway Company for the value thereof the Small Cause Court Judge was disposed to dismiss the suit without further enquiry on the ground of want of privacy between plaintiff and defendant. Held that it was premature for the Judge to say that the suit could not lie against defendant without proceeding with the further investigation of the case and that although plaintiff might have a remedy against the India General Steam Navigation Company it by no means followed that he had none against the defendant company also. GUJENDRO MOHUN SHAMA v EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY COMPANY 17 W R, 240

In such circumstances his proper remedy is by an action for damages. HOSEIN v AMEE BAKSH 22 W R, 529

5 BOUGHT AND SOLD NOTES

63 — Evidence of contract—Material variation—C & Co and H & Co were merchants at Calcutta. H & Co sold to C & Co a large quantity of indigo through the medium of a broker who drew up a sold note addressed to H & Co and submitted it to H for his approval when H having objected to a particular word remaining the broker took the sold note to C and informed him of H's objection. C struck his pen through the word, objected to by H placing his initials over that clause, and returned it to the broker who thereupon delivered it so altered to H & Co. The broker delivered to C & Co on the following day a bought note which differed in certain material terms from the sold note. In an action brought by H & Co against C & Co for non performance of the contract contained in the sold note the Supreme Court at Calcutta was of opinion that the sold note alone formed the contract and found for the plaintiffs. Held by the Privy Council on appeal (reversing that decision) that the transaction was one of bought and sold notes and that the circumstances attending C's alteration of the sold note and affixing his initials, were not sufficient to make that note alone a binding contract and that there being a material variation in the terms of the bought note with the sold note they together did not constitute a binding contract. COWE v PEXSEY 3 Moore's L A 448

64 — Broker's bought note—A broker's bought note is not of itself evidence of a contract. It is signed by one only of the parties. 68. — *Sold note & offer from bought note—Mistake in name of one of the parties to the contract—Oral evidence to show with whom the contract was really made—Specific Rel of Act 31 34—Damages for breach of contract right of suit for—A contract intended to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant was entered by a mistake on the part of the broker in the sold note as having been made between a third person and the defendant. In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the contract oral evidence was given to show that the contract was really made between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that the mistake did not mislead the defendant and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether the mistake in the sold note was a bar to the plaintiff's suit for damages on the contract. Held that there was a contract between the parties for breach of which the plaintiff could sue for damages. MARONED BHOY PUDUM TEE v CHATTERPUT SING I. 67. — *Contract of sale—Want of assent—Broker's bought and sold note—To contract through a broker to sell a quantity of paddy at a price stated the plaintiff firm signed the a id note This was taken by the broker to the defendant firm of which a member before signing the bought note wrote in Chinese characters not understood by the vendor a term as to quality This was to the effect that the paddy was to be without yellow grains and not wet A part delivery was made of paddy not answering this description For this the defendant firm made a part payment at a reduced rate. Of the rest they refused to take delivery when tendered because it was not of the quality contracted for. Held that the plaintiff's suit for the balance of the price of the part delivered and for damages for non-acceptance of delivery of the rest failed. If the plaintiffs—neither they nor their broker understanding Chinese—did not assent to the term written by the defendant then there was no contract entered into to buy. If on the contrary the plaintiffs had assented to that term then the paddy was not of the quality required by the contract. AN SHAIN SHON v MOOTHIA CHETTY to secure the profit or ascertain the loss before the Yayda day. The contracts were in the usual mercantile form and were entered into through brokers, the principals not being brought into contact with each other until after the contract was made. S's procedure was also similar. S was a mukadam and guarantee broker to the plaintiffs and he too, entered into these contracts as a speculation intending to settle them before the Yayda day but prepared if forced to do so, to perform them in kind. Held that the contracts sued on were not shown to have been agreements by way of wager. It was a highly speculative mode of doing business, but there is no law against speculation as there is against gambling. Contracts are not wagering contracts, unless it be the intention of both contracting parties, at the time of entering into the contracts, under no circumstances to call for or give delivery from or to, each other. In this case, even the defendant—saying that he did not know with whom contracts might be made on his behalf by his brokers—must have contemplated the possibility of being called on to give or take delivery. TOD v. 84. ——— Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Bombay Act III of 1860—Broker Sued by for differences paid in respect of contracts made by him for defendant—Act III of 1860 (Bombay) is still in force and has not been repealed by the Contract Act. Dayabhai v. Lakshmidas I. L. R. 9 Bom. 355 followed. As between the original parties, a promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and therefore not binding in the hands of the original payee. Qulda v. Harrow, 10 Erc., 572 distinguished. In order to constitute a wagering contract neither party should intend to perform the contract itself but only to pay the differences. In order to ascertain the real intentions of the parties, the Court must look at all the surrounding circumstances and will even go behind a written provision of the contract to judge for itself whether such provision was inserted merely for the purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction. Tod v. Lakshmidas I. L. R. 16 Bom., 441. Esakor v. Venkatarabha I. L. R., 17 Mad., 490 and Unacres v. Stock Exchange v. Sirachon, L. R., 1896 Ap. Ca., 166 referred to. The defendant employed the plaintiff from time to time as a broker to purchase Government paper and shares of the Manekji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company. The plaintiff did so to the extent of many lakhs of rupees. No delivery was given or taken but the differences only between the contract price and the price at the date of settlement (the Yayda day in each month) were paid or received by the defendant. The plaintiff now sued the defendant on two promissory notes given to the plaintiff by the defendant in respect of differences due by him in respect of the contracts thus made on his behalf. The defendant pleaded that he was not liable for the contracts being wagering contracts. It appeared from the evidence that the practice in the latar (which was followed in this case) was for brokers to enter into such contracts in their own name

and not to disclose the principals. The broker became liable to give or take delivery. The defendant stated that he did not know the persons to whom the plaintiff sold or from whom he purchased. He S (1) on the evidence that the defendant authorised the plaintiff as his broker to contract on his behalf, but in the plaintiff's own name on the understanding, that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff and pay him brokerage in respect of the transactions entered into by him on behalf or for benefit of defendant. Accordingly the plaintiff did enter into contracts in his own name with third parties. The defendant was not directly a party to them nor did his name appear anywhere in the contracts themselves. (2) That the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the losses which he paid to third parties in respect of the contracts made by the plaintiff on the defendant's behalf, and that such losses were a valid consideration pro tanto for the notes sued upon. No doubt so far as the defendant was concerned, all the contracts were merely wagering or gambling transactions, but there was no evidence to show that, so far as the third parties were concerned, they were other than genuine. The plaintiff was not, as between himself and the defendant, the principal in the transactions. He was merely the broker with a personal liability to the third parties. There was nothing to show that as between himself and the third parties the contracts were not perfectly genuine. The non-delivery and payment of differences on hand was a matter of subsequent arrangement. If he was liable to be called upon to receive or make actual delivery then, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary a similar liability rested on the defendant himself whatever might have been the defendant's own intentions. As the contracts between the plaintiff and the third parties were not void, so the contracts between the defendant and the plaintiff to indemnify the plaintiff in respect of these contracts were also valid. The mere fact that the plaintiff knowing the defendant's position and means, must have inferred that he did not mean or intend to perform the contracts in specie was not competent without more sufficient to render the contracts invalid and not binding on the defendant. The inference of the plaintiff would not be per se a binding agreement. PRINCE CHAKRAVARTY v. MANEKJI DOSABHOY I. L. R., 22 Bom., 869

The contracts for the sale and purchase of cotton were made on terms contained in a printed form which incorporated the rules framed by the cotton merchants of Dhohlers. These rules expressly provided for the delivery of cotton in every case and forbade all gambling in differences. In spite of these rules and the express terms of the contracts, the course of dealings was such that none of the contracts were ever completed except by payment of differences between the contract price and the market price in Bombay on the Paida day. The plaintiff entered into numerous transactions of this kind on the defendants' behalf. He now sued to recover from them the balance due to him on account of brokerage commission and losses incurred in the said transactions. Held that the transactions were a mere gambling for differences, and no suit would lie under Bombay Act III of 1865 to recover any of the items connected with such transactions. the plaintiff contracted to purchase from the defendant the right to receive the dividend on 50 shares of the Empress Mill at Rs 37 per share the plaintiff being under an impression that the dividend was to be declared on some subsequent day. The plaintiff deposited Rs 100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January 1893 (i.e. four days before the contract) at Rs 25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled and sought to recover the deposit of Rs 100 with interest. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Beroch, being of opinion that the contract was in its nature a suit or wagering contract rejected the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction to set aside the lower Court's decision. Held that, in the first instance the plaintiff as framed not disclosing any cause of action ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract or should have contained an allegation of fraud on the defendant's part inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact" would not under s. III of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) have made the contract voidable. Held also that if the contract was really a wager the deposit could not be recovered under s. 65 of the Contract Act as its nature must from the first have been known to the parties. To an agreement so known to be void s. 65 does not apply. If the contract was in the intention of both parties a wager the suit would be barred by s. 1 of Bombay Act III of 1865 which though it formed a part of Act XXI of 1843 which is repealed by the Contract Act is not being a special Act applicable to the Bombay Presidency itself repealed. It must be read with s. 30 of the Contract Act. Held also that to constitute a wager the transaction between the parties must wholly depend on the risk in contemplation and "neither party must look to anything but the payment of money on the determination of an uncertainty." But if one of the parties has the event in his own hands the transaction is not a wager. If the plaintiff's real contention was that defendant was aware of a declaration of dividends at Rs 25 per share and by keeping plaintiff in ignorance of the facts induced him to enter into a wagering agreement for payment of differences at a contract rate of Rs 37 per share then to a suit for the recovery of the deposit made to the defendant with reference to such an agreement, Bombay Act III of 1865, has no application. Wagering contracts are not illegal. They are simply destitute of legal effect. If fraud was practised on plaintiff the maxim pacta sunt servanda would not apply. DATTA TRIBHONANDAS v. 93.—Addition of words to contract—Sale of goods—R. G. & Co. entered into a contract to sell certain goods to A. S. & S. both Calcutta firms. The contract which was in a printed English form was taken on the 18th December 1909 by one M. on behalf of the firm of R. G. & Co. to obtain the signature of the vendee's firm. It was signed on their behalf by A. S. Neither M. nor A. S. understood English and no explanation was given of the terms of the contract to A. S. at the time he signed it but there had been negotiations between M. and A. S. as to these goods prior to the time when A. S.'s signature was obtained. It did not appear that the goods had been identified in any way by the purchasers who had merely seen a sample. After his signature A. S. wrote in Nagri: "Goods fresh green dimes five cases at two annas and three pie per jarli." A. S. & S. afterwards, on the 9th February 1910, paid Rs 1000 as earnest money which was accepted by R. G. & Co. who then allowed further time for taking delivery of the goods which however A. S. & S. finding some of the goods were stained declined to do. R. G. & Co. thereupon brought an action for breach of contract in not taking delivery and for a cross-suit was brought by A. S. & S. to recover the Rs 1000 paid as earnest money. Held that the words "fresh goods" after the signature of A. S. constituted part of the contract into which the parties entered, and by which they were bound. MADHAN CHANDRA RUDAR v. AMRIT SING NAYAN SING [5 B. L. R., 111]

84. ————— Signature—Repudiation—Statute of frauds—The plaintiffs contracted with the defendant for the purchase from him of a certain quantity of hog's lard. The terms of the contract were contained in a letter which was drafted by the plaintiffs and sent to the defendant for signature. The defendant returned the letter unsigned, with two additional clauses. The plaintiffs not being able to agree to one of these clauses had an interview with the defendant when the defendant took the document away with him and subsequently on 1st May returned it signed but with the additional clauses still remaining. The plaintiffs had another interview with the defendant on 5th June during which the additional clause objected to by the plaintiffs was struck out one of the plaintiffs writing the word cancelled against that clause and the defendant putting his initials against the word "cancelled". The plaintiffs then added to the contract the words approved together with Rand C being the initials of their firm. Other alterations had been made in the document and it containing many erasures the plaintiffs on the same day sent a fair copy to the defendant for signature but the defendant wrote repudiating the alleged contract and refusing to sign the document. Held (confirming the decision of the Court below) there was no binding contract between the parties. The signature of the defendant put to the document on 17th May was not a sufficient signature by the party to be charged so as to satisfy the statute of frauds. CHARRIOL v SHRECK 8 B L R 305

85. ————— Signature—To a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant for the purchase by the defendant of a cargo of salt the plaintiffs after the contract had been signed by the defendant added in the margin Ten days demurrage will be allowed at Rs. 20 per diem. Held that the addition of the words in the margin did not amount to an alteration within the rule of English law the alteration must be either something which appears to be attested by the signature or something which alters the character of the instrument. KOH v HANTO NATH SHAW I L R 3 Cal. 220

The lower Appellate Court reversed both decrees on the ground that the bonds were vitiated by a fraudulent alteration of them in the material part viz the date fixed for payment. Held that the documents might be used as evidence of the debt between the parties and also of the creation of the charge upon the property hypothecated. It lies upon the parties who seek to enforce an altered instrument to show the circumstances under which the alteration took place. RAMASAMY KOX v BHAYANNI ATTAR RAMASAMY KON v SETHUWATHAN a/c/a CHINNA BHAYANNI ATTAR 11 Mad. 247

Effect of—Bond Forgery—Fraud—A person who had a bond executed in his favour by one of three brothers forged the signatures of the other two brothers to the bond and brought a suit upon it in its altered form against the three brothers. The forgery having been established the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as against all the three defendants and this decision was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court—Held that the decision was correct as a material alteration in a bond is if fraudulently made sufficient to render the bond void. A party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state and any material alteration of it will vitiate the instrument. Where a person brings a suit upon a document which when produced in evidence is found to have been fraudulently altered to the knowledge of the plaintiff no Court ought to allow an amendment to enable him to succeed upon it in its original state. GOOVY CHUNDER GHOSH v DEBCHANDR MUNDUL

Alteration in material part—Effect of alteration as vitiating document—Vesting of interest by execution of mortgage instrument—By an agreement entered into between plaintiff and defendants' predecessors in title plaintiff undertook to sell and convey certain lands to the purchasers and to allow half the purchase money to remain at interest for three years on security of the lands sold. Plaintiff's mother was alive as also his son who was then a minor. In order to protect the purchasers from any claims by the said mother or son as against the lands so agreed to be sold plaintiff further agreed to give the purchasers a bond indemnifying them from any such or other claims. Plaintiff in pursuance of the said agreement duly executed a conveyance of the lands; he also gave the purchasers an indemnity in respect of claims by his mother as against the lands. The purchasers executed a mortgage over the lands in plaintiff's favour in which the indemnity to be furnished by plaintiff was at first referred to in general terms but the document concluded with the words, 'a security should be furnished for this sum on account of the minor only'. The balance of purchase money so secured not having been paid plaintiff brought a suit for the sale of the mortgaged land and before doing so tendered an indemnity protecting the defendants against any claims that might be made as against the lands by the plaintiff's said minor son. It was found that the words for the minor son had been added to the mortgage instrument after its execution. On its being contended that the alteration was a material one and vinted the document and that the suit being based on the altered document must fail and that the tender of a general guarantee as originally agreed upon was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue—Held per COLLIER, C.J. and BEN OV J. (in an order calling for a finding as to whether the alteration had been made with the mortgagor's consent) that the mortgage instrument having provided for security to be given by plaintiff in general terms the addition of the words for the minor only restricted the liability of the property to be given by plaintiff as security to claims made by the said minor son. It diminished the guarantee to be given by plaintiff against claims by the mother or others. It was thus an alteration in a material part of the document and would vitiate it as a basis for the plaintiff's suit unless the plaintiff could show that the alteration had been made with the consent of the mortgagors who executed the document. The finding of the lower Court was that the alteration had been made without the mortgagors' consent. Held SUBRAMANIAM ATTAR, Offg C.J. and MOOR J. (O'FARRELL, J. dissenting) that on the execution of the mortgage instrument any interest in the property comprised therein all once became vested in the plaintiff that such interest was not and could not have been divested from him by the subsequent addition of the words referred to, and that in asking for the sale of the land plaintiff was seeking to enforce not a right resting on the contract or covenant but one arising by operation of law with reference to the vested interest created by the instrument having been executed, that though reference was made in the plaint to the provisions relating to the mortgage instrument in its altered state such reference was not an essential part of plaintiff's cause of action and that the suit was not necessarily based on the altered instrument that the execution of a security bond in terms of the mortgage instrument before it was altered was not a condition precedent and the suit was sustainable though no such security had been given before the institution of the suit and that (the question of damages not arising) plaintiff was entitled to a decree on the mortgage instrument which would also provide that he must furnish a proper security bond before an order absolute would be passed Per O'FARRELL, J.—That inasmuch as the suit was based not on the transferred right but on the altered document and as no obligation had as yet attached under the unaltered document the suit should be dismissed that the defendants' liability was contingent upon the prior execution by plaintiff of a general guarantee and not of the limited one which he relying on the fraudulent alteration had tendered that where an agreement has as to one of the parties been wholly executed, the altered contract may be given in evidence of the correlative obligations incurred by the other party but that here the agreement so far as it related to repayment of the purchase money was executory and contingent upon the fulfilment by the plaintiff of the prior obligation to execute a proper guarantee and that a conditional decree upon a proper security bond being executed could not be given *SUBRAMANIAM AYYAN v. transfer—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act) s 18—In a transaction between two persons where one is so situated as to be under the control and influence of the other the Courts in this country have to see that such other does not unduly and unfairly exercise that influence and control over such person for his own advantage or benefit or for the advantage or benefit of some religious object in which he is interested and will call upon him to give clear and cogent proof that the transaction complained of was such a one as the law would support and recognize. Where a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation had existed Courts of Equity have invariably placed the burden of maintaining the transaction upon the party benefited by it requiring him to show that it was of an unobjectionable character and one which it ought not to disturb. The exercise of this beneficial jurisdiction is not confined to cases only between guardian and ward attorney and client father and son but the principle thus granted stands upon a general principle applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. The plaintiff who on the death of the widow of his brother became entitled to the estate of the deceased found himself resisted in his claim by wealthy relatives. He was a man without means. The defendant took him to his house kept him there found him all the money for the purpose of carrying on his litigation with his relatives in which the plaintiff succeeded. What the litigation was for mutation of names in respect of the property was pending in the Revenue Court and while plaintiff was residing with the defendant he executed the deed in favour of defendant a brother for the nominal consideration of Rs 500 or half the property he claimed and soon shortly after the mutation case had terminated in his favour he executed a deed of endowment of the remaining half in favour of a temple founded by the ancestor of the defendant and in which the defendant was interested and the result was that plaintiff was left as poor as he was when he first came into the defendant's hands. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud and of false decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that looking at all the facts such a relation between plaintiff and defendant in the course of the year 1885 had been established as to cast upon the latter the obligation of satisfying the Court that the transaction which was given effect to by the deed of endowment was an honest bona fide transaction.

131 Oppressive conditions in deed—Inadequacy of consideration—Where money lenders dealing with ignorant illiterate peasants made use of the necessitous position of these peasants who were seeking to raise a sum of money for the purpose of stocking and tilling their lands to impose upon them a contract in the form of a mortgage by which they agreed in default of punctual payment of the half produce and other events to sell their land at a gross undervalue for one third of the amount of the mortgage debt which in itself was not more than equal to half the value of the annual produce of the land and to remain liable to the remaining two thirds of that debt with interest and even if no default should occur on their parts in payment of a moiety of the annual produce or the performance of their other covenants and notwithstanding full payment of the principal to continue for fifteen years to pay the half produce of the lands to the mortgagees—Held (reversing the decrees of both the Courts below) that the deed of mortgage should only stand as security for the payment of the principal sum of Rs 300 and interest at 12 per cent and in all other respects should be set aside as inequitable fraudulent and grossly oppressive. Held also that if in execution of the reversed decrees the lands had been made over to the mortgagees as purchasers they should be restored to the mortgagors and that the rents profits and produce received by the mortgagees while in possession should be set off on account against the said principal sum and interest and that the balance should be paid by the party against whom the same might be found. Mere inadequacy of consideration unless it be so great as to amount to evidence of fraud is not sufficient ground for setting aside a contract or refusing to decree specific performance of it. But inadequacy of consideration when found in conjunction with any such other circumstances as suppress a true value of property misrepresentation or fraud surprise oppression or urgent necessity for money weakness of understanding or even ignorance is an ingredient which weighs powerfully with a Court of Equity in considering whether it should set aside contracts or refuse to decree specific performance of them. KADARI RAO v. 133 Parties dealing on unequal terms—Inequitable contract—Assuming that the same principles are applicable here as in the English Court of Chancery the High Court held that although in a class of cases without positive fraud a contract may be set aside unless it is shown to have been made upon adequate consideration yet as a general rule before the defendant is called upon to prove that he has given full value for property sold to him the plaintiff must first make out that the parties to the bargain were dealing on terms so unequal as to render it improper for a Court of Justice to enforce any contract they may have made unless it can be shown that the contract was in fact one which a prudent person with proper advice and a suitance might well have made. JUOO BENDROO TR. Held that it was not sufficient to find that the consent given by the plaintiff was not caused by coercion as defined in the Contract Act nor by duress as known to the English law but that the questions to be decided were (1) whether undue advantage had been taken of the plaintiff's position (2) whether the plaintiff had been sufficiently informed as to her rights or had proper advisers (3) whether the contract was an unconscionable or catching bargain. BECHIT I PHAYYA v. The High Court as a Court of equity possesses the power exercised by the Court of Chancery of granting relief in cases of such unconscionable or grossly unequal and oppressive bargains as no man of ordinary prudence would enter into and which from their nature and the relative positions of the parties raise a presumption of fraud or undue influence. The principles upon which such relief is granted apply to contracts in which exceedingly onerous conditions are imposed by money lenders upon poor and ignorant persons in rural districts. The exercise of such power has not been affected by the repeal of the usury laws. Chesterfield v Jausen 2 Ves 105 O'Rourke v Bolingbroke L R 2 Ap Cas 814 Earl of Aylesford v Morris L R 3 Ch Ap 484 Nevill v Snelling L R 15 Ch D 679 and Beynon v Cook L R 10 Ch Ap 889 referred to. An illiterate Kurmi in the position of a peasant proprietor executed a mortgage deed in favour of a professional money lender to whom he owed Rs 7 by which he agreed to pay interest on that sum at the rate of 24 per cent per annum at compound interest. He further agreed that dharta or a yearly fine at the rate of one anna per rupee should be allowed to the mortgagee to be calculated by yearly rests. It was also provided that the interest should be paid from the profits of certain malikana land of the mortgagor and that if the interest were not paid for two years the mortgagee should be put in possession of this land. As security for the debt a six pies zamindari share was mortgaged for a term of eleven years. The effect of the stipulation as to dharta was that one anna per rupee would be added at the end of every year not only to the principal mortgage money but also to the interest due and the total would be again regarded as the principal sum for the ensuing year. Ten years after the date of the mortgage the mortgagor brought a suit for redemption on payment of only Rs 7 or such sum as the Court might determine as due to the mortgagee. At that time the accounts made up by the mortgagee showed that the debt of Rs 7 with compound interest had swollen to Rs 73 of which the dharta alone amounted to Rs 11. Held that the stipulation in the deed as to dharta was not of the kind referred to in s. 74 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and that there was no question of penalty but that looking to the relative positions of the parties and the unconscionable and oppressive nature of the stipulation the benefit thereof should be disallowed to the mortgagee and the mortgagor permitted to redeem on payment of the mortgage money and interest no appeal having been preferred by him from the decree of the first Court making redemption subject to the payment of interest. found that advantage was taken by the plaintiff of the fact that the defendant was being pressed in the tabals for immediate payment of revenue due to induce him to execute the bond charging compound interest at the above mentioned rate notwithstanding that ample security was given by mortgage of landed property. It was also found that although under the terms of the bond the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one which the Court had no doubt power to refuse to enforce and which under all the circumstances it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to and that under the circumstances compound interest should not be allowed. Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v Kali Prasad Ghose I L R 12 Calc 220 Beynon v Cook L R 10 Ch Ap 889 and Lall v Ram Prasad I L R 9 All 74 referred to. 138 ——— Contract to pay expenses of litigation—The result of the English cases regarding hard or unconscionable bargains is that in dealings with expectant heir reversioners or remaindermen the fact that the bargain was declined by others is not being sufficiently advantageous does not raise a presumption that it was fair and reasonable and that until the contrary is satisfactorily proved by the party trying to maintain the bargain, the Court may presume that a bargain which apparently provides in the opinion of the Court for an unusually high return for an exceptionally high rate of interest is a hard and unconscionable bargain against which relief should be granted. The doctrine of equity on the subject of such bargains is applicable in England only to dealings with expectant heir reversioners or remaindermen. The judgment of the Privy Council in Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v Kali Prasad Ghose I L R 12 Calc 220 L R 12 I A 215 does not imply that the doctrine is to be applied in India to cases except where it would have been applied in England or except where the case is in some way analogous to a case of snatching a bargain with an expectant heir reversioner or remainderman or except there is some fiduciary relationship between the lender and the borrower although there may be no fraud or undue influence or except there is an incapacity such as immaturity on the part of the borrower to appreciate the true effect of his bargain. For the purposes of meeting the expenses of an appeal to the High Court the appellant on the advice of his legal advisers, executed a bond for Rs 2000 in consideration of the outlay agreeing to repay such sum within one year or for agreed to pay the Rs 2000 within one year from his recovering possession of the property in suit; and, at the request of the obligor a plea was entered for the obligor advanced Rs 700 which was applied to the expenses of the appeal. The High Court dismissed the appeal and in a deed executed by the obligor in favour of the obligee and others for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a further appeal to the Privy Council he admitted his liability under the former bond. The Privy Council decreed his appeal and he obtained possession of the property in suit but declined to pay the Rs 20,000 upon which the obligee sued upon the bond. It was found that apart from the moneys borrowed by the obligor from time to time he was without even the means of subsistence that he executed the bond with his eyes open and perfectly understood his position and the effect of both the instruments executed by him that no fraud or improper pressure appeared to have been allowed to him that his legal advisers had acted honestly and to the best of their ability in his interests that there was nothing to show that having regard to the risks of the litigation he could have obtained the assistance necessary for the prosecution of his appeal on better terms than those contained in the bond that without such assistance he could not have appealed to the High Court and that the obligee gave him such assistance upon his application. Held that although there was nothing to show that the obligor could have obtained an advance on terms more advantageous to himself it was for the obligee to establish to the Court's satisfaction without reasonable doubt that he could not have done so and that thus not having been established and the reasonableness and fairness of the bargain not being proved by showing that there had been difficulties in negotiating it or that others had refused it as not sufficiently advantageous to them the Court should hold the bargain to be a hard and unconscionable one which should not be enforced. The Court gave the plaintiff a decree for the Rs 700 actually advanced with simple interest at 10 per cent per annum from the date of the bond to the date of the decree with costs in proportion and interest at 6 per cent per annum on the Rs 20,000 interest and costs from the date of the decree until payment. CHUNNI LAL v. Under the deed the plaintiffs were liable to furnish security to the extent of Rs 10,000 and to advance Rs 500 for other necessary expenses and they did in fact furnish such security and advanced sums aggregating Rs 512. The appeal was successful. The appellant having failed to put the vendees in possession of the property conveyed by the deed and recovered by him under the Privy Council's decree the vendees sued him for possession of the property and moneys profits afterwards agreeing that the Court should in lieu thereof award them compensation in money equivalent thereto. Held that although the case was very different from cases in which persons interfered for their own benefit in litigation not their own or in which mukhtars, wakils or persons of that class of professional money lenders taking advantage of the borrower's position sued to enforce a contract obtained by them from him and although the defendant was not entitled to sympathy yet judging by the disproportion between the liability incurred by the plaintiffs under the contract and the reward which they were to obtain in the event of defendant's success it must be concluded either that they did not believe his claim to be well founded and consequently entered though unwillingly into a gambling transaction or if they believe the claim to be well founded that the reward contracted for was excessive and unconscionable and in either case the contract could not be enforced in its terms. Held also that if the doctrine of equity applicable to such cases were applied in favour of the borrower it should also be applied in favour of the lender that as there was no reason to suspect the plaintiff's motives it would be inequitable to relieve the defendant from all liability that it was only fair that he should compensate the plaintiffs for the use of their security bonds from the date when they were deposited in the High Court to the earliest date after the judgment of the Privy Council when the plaintiffs could have obtained them back that simple interest at 12 per cent per annum on the amounts of the bonds for the period would be reasonable compensation for such use that the defendant should also repay the amounts advanced by the plaintiffs for the expenses of the litigation with interest on each advance at 10 per cent from the date on which it was made to the date of the decree in the present case and that he should pay interest on the whole amount thus decreed at 6 per cent from the date of the decree till payment. CHUNNI LAL v. 148 — Difference between articles contracted for and those tendered—Act for non acceptance—The plaintiffs contracted to supply the defendants with from 20,000 to 300,000 fanny bags described as No 6 quality, size 40 by 25 inches, the defendants to have the option of taking bags of a longer or shorter length at proportionate prices duly giving a first right of notice to the plaintiffs delivery to be taken in August 1880. The defendants, after taking delivery of 11,000 of the bags found that the bags tendered were mixed in size some being longer and some being shorter than the contract size and refused to take delivery of the remainder. In an action for breach of contract in not accepting the bags the Court below found on the evidence that out of 2,000 bags which were examined 100 were short by from a quarter to half an inch but that the bags which were really short were very few out of a large quantity which came up to contract size and held therefore that there had been a substantial performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs. On appeal the Court found that the parties did not contemplate any large margin of difference in the size of the bags and that the proportion of those which differed was large enough to justify the defendants in refusing to take delivery and held that the tender of such bags by the plaintiffs was not a substantial performance of the contract. MILLER v GOSWAMI COMPANY 8 B L R 285

149 — Part acceptance of goods by defendant not according to contract—Rate payable for such goods—The defendants contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs 2,000 maunds of fresh clean and good up-country indigo seed guaranteed growth of season 1880/71 at £11 per maund to be delivered to the defendants agent at Hajipore all in February next. In part performance of this contract the plaintiffs delivered and the defendants' agent at Hajipore accepted 865 maunds of seed no objection as to quality being then taken. But when the remainder of the seed was tendered in February the defendants refused to accept it on the ground that it was not according to contract. At the same time and upon the same grounds they refused to pay the contract price for the seed already accepted and tendered instead the marked price at the time of delivery. In an action to recover the contract price of the 865 maunds delivered and damages for loss on resale of the remainder of the seed the Judge of the Court below found on the facts that the seed was not seed of the growth of 1880/71 as far as it was reasonably possible to procure it; and that though there was evidence to show that seed of the previous season of good quality and in good preservation was occasionally mixed with the new seed and that seed so mixed had been accepted as a performance of the contracts for 1880/71 yet there was no evidence that under such contracts as the present the seller was by custom at liberty to mix seed of two crops so as to bring the sample up to an average quality and further that a custom so directly at variance with the express terms of the contract could not if proved be allowed to prevail. Held also that the defendants had waived any objection to the 565 maunds which must therefore be taken as a good delivery pro tanto under the contract and must be paid for accordingly. Held on appeal (affirming the decision of the Court below) that the plaintiffs had not delivered seed according to the contract but reversing the decision of the Court below that the contract was a contract for the delivery of the entire quantity of 2,000 maunds and that the plaintiffs could only recover for the 565 maunds as on a new contract arising at the time when the seed was accepted such contract being to pay for the seed according to its value and not according to the rate stipulated for the 2,000 maunds. MACFARLANE v CAIRN 8 B L R 459 17 W R 244

150 — Endorsement by parties on original contract—Transfer of contract—Action for non acceptance—On the 16th April 1881 the plaintiffs contracted to purchase from F M & Co of Bombay at £18 per ton the entire cargo of coal per Culcan amounting to 900 tons or thereabouts. On 18th April the plaintiffs transferred the contract to the defendants and one Nanabhai Bomanasha and the following endorsement was made:—The contract to be transferred to Messrs Tullockchand and Shapurji and Nanabhai Bomanasha at £20½ per ton. For C H B Forbes and Selves W Tennent & Co. Underneath this endorsement the transferees wrote as follows:—Accepted 430 tons at £20½ per ton Nanabhai Bomanasha Accepted 40 tons at £20½ per ton Tullockchand and Shapurji. The Culcan arrived at Bombay with a cargo of 2,167 tons of coal on board of which it appeared that 1,300 tons had been shipped to the Bombay Barola and Central India Railway Company and 867 tons to the order of the shippers F M & Co were agents at Bombay for the shippers. The defendants refused to take delivery of the coal on the ground that the contract transferred to them and Nanabhai Bomanasha was a contract for an entire cargo. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for non acceptance contending that there had been no transfer to defendants and Nanabhai Bomanasha of the original contract but a new several contract for separate portions of the cargo. Held that the joint effect of the endorsement and the original contract was that the defendants agreed to purchase 430 tons part of an entire cargo of 900 tons or thereabouts; that inasmuch as the cargo of the Culcan consisted of 2,167 tons the defendants were not bound to accept any part of such cargo and that the suit was not maintainable. Borrowman v Drayton L R 2 Ex D 15 followed. FORBES v TULLOCKCHAND MAROCKCHAND I L R, 3 Bom., 388 hundred full pressed bales fully good fair Kishli cotton at Rs208 8 per candy to be delivered from March 10th to April 1st. On March 21st the plaintiffs sent the defendant a letter reminding him of the contract and requesting him to take delivery. On receipt of this letter the defendant put the matter into the hands of V. The plaintiff had then no cotton of the specific kind to deliver nor did the letter refer to any particular bales. At 11 30 o'clock A.M. on March 30th, the plaintiffs sent the defendant a letter enclosing a sampling order directed to an employe of Messrs H and S on whose premises the bales referred to in the order were lying. V on behalf of the defendant got samples taken of the cotton and examined them but without reference on that day to any standard. He then however conceived doubts as to the quality of the cotton and expressed his doubts to the plaintiff in the evening of that day. On 31st March the plaintiffs sent the defendant a delivery order enclosed in a letter from their solicitors calling on the defendant to attend with his surveyor at 1 P.M. on that day to survey the cotton as otherwise an ex parte survey would be held. This letter reached the defendant at 11 30 o'clock A.M. and was given by him to V at noon of the same day. V applied to M to attend as surveyor but M was unable to do so. The plaintiffs had an ex parte survey held by Messrs C and B at 1 P.M. and they pronounced the cotton samples of which were submitted to them to be fully good fair Kishli cotton. While this survey was going on the defendant was on the Cotton Green but declined to attend saying that V and his surveyor were coming. Shortly afterwards V did come and subsequently wrote a letter to plaintiffs in the defendant's name stating that the cotton was not of the description contracted to be sold by them and asking for a survey. This letter reached the plaintiffs at 2 19 o'clock P.M. After this there was a discussion between plaintiffs and defendant and V. On that afternoon (the 31st March) the plaintiffs' solicitors sent a letter to the defendant stating the result of the survey and requiring him to take delivery. This was answered by a letter of next day (April 1st) from the defendant's solicitors denying that the cotton was of proper quality or that proper notice of the survey had been given alleging that the defendant had that morning attended with his surveyor and asked leave to survey the cotton which had been refused and stating that the contract must be treated as cancelled. The cotton was sold by auction on April 5th. The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover Rs1631 11 as damages for non acceptance of the cotton. The defendant contended that there had been no reasonable time allowed by the plaintiffs for the examination of the cotton and that a joint survey should have been held. Held that a joint survey was not necessary under the terms of s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) and that the defendant having had a period of twenty four hours for inspection had had a reasonable opportunity of seeing whether the cotton offered by the plaintiffs was such cotton as the plaintiffs were bound by their contract to deliver. A purchaser of goods is not entitled to continue inspecting and examining the goods offered by the vendor until the expiration of the period for delivery. A reasonable opportunity for such inspection and examination is all that he is entitled to. PITCHAY MOHARJI & JAYWADAS PITAMBERDAS

Goods not agreeing with sample—Conduct of parties—Estoppel—In a suit for damages for breach of warranty where the dispute was whether the goods tendered (shellac) were according to the contract it appeared that a sample had been taken by the plaintiffs' surveyor and referred to the selling broker to decide whether the goods from which it had been taken ought to be accepted and he decided that they should be taken at one rupee per maund less than the contract rate which award the parties agreed to abide by. The surveyor then went to the godown of the defendants thoroughly examined the undivided shellac and removed it to the godown of the plaintiffs. Held that after this the parties could not be allowed to raise the question whether there had been a breach of that contract and to ask for damages by reason of the goods not being of the quality contracted for. FORNABO & J. 153 Alleged breach of warranty by vendor on a sale and delivery of goods—Burden of proof after acceptance following upon an examination by purchaser—Under five contracts for the sale of good Burma cutch to be delivered to a Calcutta firm in Calcutta by the vendors who knew that it was bought for the export market delivery and acceptance followed upon a searching examination of the cutch by the purchasers. The latter having sent advices of this purchase to a New York firm with which they were in partnership parcels of cutch were sold to different buyers in America to whom under such forward contracts the cutch was shipped in separate shipments by the Calcutta firm. On the arrival of the cutch objects was taken to its quality by the American buyers who refused to take delivery. The Calcutta firm thereupon sued the vendors under the five contracts above mentioned. The burden of proof being upon the plaintiffs who had accepted the cutch after examination in Calcutta to prove the breach of contract by the vendors by cogent evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of due performance that arose from such acceptance. Held that this presumption was rebutted in the absence of evidence as to the treatment of the cutch on its re-shipment by the plaintiffs on the voyage from India to America and at the port of arrival. GAY KIM SWEE & J. Madras certain goods of a certain quality subject to survey before shipment at a certain price for Cocanada, delivery in April and May terms full advance and local exchange 2 per cent payable at Madras. This contract was contained in bought and sold notes. It was further agreed that the goods were to be delivered on board any ship P & Co. might direct at the port of Cocanada. P & Co. paid the full amount of the purchase money in January. On the 31st March P & Co. wrote to W & Co. requesting that the goods might be marked in a certain way. On the 18th May W & Co. wrote to P & Co. enclosing a letter from S N & Co. to S N & Co. of Cocanada requesting S N & Co. to hold the goods (which were said to have been purchased by W & Co. from S N & Co. and to be in godown) at the disposal of P & Co. In the letter to P & Co. from W & Co. the goods were also said to be in godown at that date. On the same day P & Co. wrote to S N & Co. enclosing a delivery order for the goods (which P & Co. stated they believed to be in godown) requesting that they might be marked in a particular way. On the 25th May S N & Co. wrote to P & Co. informing them that they held the goods at P & Co.'s disposal. On the 28th May P & Co. received this letter. On the 31st May P & Co. chartered a ship to take on board the said goods and other goods bought by P & Co. from S N & Co. and others and wrote to S N & Co. informing them that the ship would arrive about the 12th June. On the 8th June P & Co. wrote to S N & Co. acknowledging receipt of a letter which stated that only a portion of the goods to be shipped was ready. On the 9th June P & Co. received a letter from S N & Co. stating that all the goods were ready. On the 17th June the ship arrived at Cocanada. On the 21st June S N & Co. stopped payment and ceased to carry on business. No goods were delivered according to the contract. S N & Co. never had the goods to deliver between 18th May and 17th June. In a suit by P & Co. to recover from W & Co. the price paid and damages for breach of contract to deliver the goods it was contended for W & Co. (1) that the transfer of the delivery order of the 18th May amounted to a delivery of the goods. Held that as S N & Co. had neither had possession of the goods to be delivered nor had appropriated any goods to the contract the delivery order was imperative. (2) That the acceptance of the delivery order by P & Co. amounted to an agreement that S N & Co. should deliver to P & Co. the goods when ready and that the liability of S N & Co. was substituted for that of W & Co. Held that such an agreement could not be inferred. (3) That as S N & Co. by accepting the delivery order were estopped from denying that they had possession of the goods as against P & Co. S N & Co. were discharged as against W & Co. and therefore W & Co. had no remedy against W & Co. Held (1) that S N & Co. were not discharged as against W & Co. as S N & Co.'s representations were false. (2) that even if S N & Co. were discharged this could not affect P & Co. (4) That as P & Co. had not supplied a ship in May they had failed to perform their part of the contract and could not recover. Held distinguishing Bowes v Shand (L R 2 App Ca 450) and Reuter v Sala (L R 4 C P D 239) that the presence of the ship in May was not a condition precedent to P & Co. recovering. (5) That W & Co. had rescinded the contract on the 20th June by refusing to deliver and therefore P & Co. were only entitled to recover the price paid. Held that W & Co. were not entitled to rescind the contract. Held also that P & Co. having paid in advance were entitled to a reasonable time after the 29th June to prepare to purchase other goods and were entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price on the 1st of July as damages for the breach to deliver. SHAW & BILL

155 — Sale of unascertained goods—Appropriation by vendor—Passing of property—Power of resale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Measure of damages—The contract was for sale by description of 15 bales of grey shirtings (to arrive) at an agreed price. It was found that the 15 bales which were tendered by the plaintiff did answer the description but the defendants refused to accept them alleging that they were wrongly marked. Under the contract of sale the plaintiffs had an express power of resale. After giving notice to the defendants they had the goods re-sold at auction and bought them in themselves as the highest bidders. Then they brought an action for the difference between the contract price and the price realized at the resale framing the suit as for loss on resale and not for damages for breach of the contract. Held the defendants having refused to accept the goods the property in them remained in the vendors (plaintiffs) and the resale had no effect whatever. To such a case as this neither s. 107 of the Contract Act nor the proviso for resale in the contract itself can have any application. Such power is required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money. The plaintiffs were entitled to receive only the difference between the market price of the day and the contract price and that was the true measure of damages. WILL & CO. v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN

this suit to recover the ornaments and clothes, together with the Rs 100 paid to the first defendant as "upariyaman" and Rs 10,000 as damages. The first defendant was sued both in her personal capacity and as heir and legal representative of her son L. The first defendant pleaded that neither she nor the second defendant were bound by the betrothal agreement as they were not parties to it that the contract had been a contingent contract inasmuch as her son L had agreed to give K (defendant No. 2) in marriage to the second plaintiff only on condition that he (L) should obtain in marriage U the daughter of the third plaintiff and that L and U were accordingly betrothed that L had died in 1884, and that the contract had been thereby determined that she had been willing to renew it and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U but that the plaintiffs had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement—At the time when the marriages are to take place the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage. Held that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter A (defendant No. 2) in marriage to the second plaintiff and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the Rs 100 paid by the plaintiffs as upariyaman together with Rs 10,000 damages for the breach of contract. The agreement further provided that if the contractor did suspend or delay the performance of his part of the contract the defendants might through their architect give notice requiring the works to be proceeded with and in case of default on the part of the contractor for a period of twenty-eight days might enter upon and take possession of the premises. It was further provided that the decision of the architect with respect to

At the time when the child was handed over to the widow her husband's corpse was still in the house and the relatives of the child and other members of the caste obstructed the removal of the corpse until the child had been accepted in adoption and until the widow had executed a deed of adoption. 1. — ss. 20 21—If state of facts—

Erroneous expectation—The defendant executed to the plaintiff in 1847 a mortgage (corresponding to a lease at a fixed rental) agreement to pay to the plaintiff Rs 150 annually. At the date of the execution of the mortgage the Government assessment was Rs 6-8-0 but in 1872 it was enhanced to Rs 129 8 0 and a local fund cess of Rs 4 9 0 imposed in addition. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him the enhanced assessment and the cess. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover inasmuch as the defendant's liability was fixed by the terms of the mortgage which was binding although it had been executed by both parties in the belief that the Government assessment would not be increased. A mistake as to existing facts may invalidate a contract but an erroneous expectation which events entirely falsify has no effect. BABSHETTI v VENKATARAMANA I L R. 3 Bom. 154

2. — Mula vargdars Power of to raise rent of mul gamdar—Enhancement of assessment—Power of the State—A mula vargdar or superior holder cannot raise the rent of his mul gamdar or permanent tenant holding at a fixed rent on the ground that the assessment on the land has been enhanced at the Government survey. Babshetti v Venkataramana I L R. 3 Bom. 154 and Ramkrishna Ains v Narah va Shanboy S A No 46 of 1879 followed. Vyakantia Bapuji v Government of Bombay 12 Bom. In 1818 B and R mortgaged a piece of land to J. It was to be redeemed in eight years or else to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. It was not redeemed; and in 1859 B in whose name the land was entered in the Government records executed a razinama in favour of V and V passed a kabuliat accepting the land B and R then became V's tenants, and were as such successfully sued by him for rent in 1863. In 1872 J sold the land to N who again sold it to the defendant. The plaintiff as purchaser from the original mortgagors (B and R) of their alleged equity of redemption filed the present suit to redeem the property. Held that as the razinama given by B contained no reservation and as it was accompanied by a transfer of possession it had the effect of a conveyance of all the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee. It operated to extinguish the equity of redemption notwithstanding any misconception or ignorance on B's part of his rights as mortgagor. VISHNU SAKHARAM PHATAK v KASHINATH BAPU SHANKAR

S agreed to become a surety on condition that F would deposit with him the amount of the security. F made the deposit and S became a surety. The period for which S was responsible for F's good conduct having expired without F committing any act to forfeit the security and S refusing to return the deposit F sued S to recover the deposit. A and B having a claim against C for Rs 1000 but not being in circumstances themselves to institute a suit for its enforcement A sold fourteen annas or fourteen sixteenths of their claim to D for Rs 1000 and a suit was then instituted by A, B and D against C. C pleaded that the sale to D was void under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act and that A and B could not sue for two annas only of their entire claim. 18 ——— Excise Act XXII of 1881 s. 42—License—Sub lease—Breach of conditions—Consideration forbidden by law—Immoral consideration—Consideration opposed to public policy— The plaintiff obtained from the excise authorities a license to manufacture and sell country liquor such license containing a condition against subletting the benefits of the license. By s. 42 of the Excise Act (XXII of 1881) the violation of any condition of a license granted under the Act is made a punishable offence. The plaintiff sublet the license to defendants who on the 5th of September 1884 executed an agreement to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money in which was included the sum of Rs 500 which the defendants had undertaken to pay to plaintiff as rent reserved on the sublease. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of the amount due to him on the agreement and it was decreed by the Court of first instance but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. On second appeal the plaintiff contended on the authority of Gauri Shankar v. Mumtaz Ali Khan [I. L. R. 2 All 411] that his suit had been wrongly dismissed. Held that the subletting of a license to manufacture and sell country liquor having been made punishable as an offence is to be deemed as an act contrary to law within the meaning of s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and the claim to recover money due on such sublease was therefore not enforceable in a Court of Justice. Gauri Shankar v. family property in possession of defendants. The defendant admitted the execution by them of the decree of the High Court by which the plaintiff's annuity was given on condition of the withdrawal of a criminal proceeding against them and that there was no criminal suit at all and that at the time of its execution by them there was no dispute or question between them and plaintiff as to a partition of family property which had been finally settled by the Civil Court at Salem in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 and the decree in which the defendants had received Rs 1000 and odd from the plaintiff. They denied any division of family property by mediation as also that they were the payees of Rs 2000000 from family property in their possession also the validity of 1 and that it was legally binding upon them. The Court of first instance found (1) that a partition of family property was effected by mediation and the instrument A was returned to the mediators by defendants on account of family property in defendant's possession (2) that 1 was valid in law and binding on defendants and gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount sued for. Upon appeal by the first defendant - Held by the High Court that as the decree in original suit No. 2 of 1908 (finally disposed of on appeal by the High Court) settled all the rights of the parties and among other matters the question of this alleged concealment or theft which the Court found and the plaintiff to have falsely asserted there was here no res dubia or in incerta nor could either party believe that there was such. The final judgment of a competent Court in a suit to which the plaintiff was a party had determined the matter. That on the facts of the case it seemed impossible to doubt that the note was created as a consideration for getting rid of the criminal proceedings and that as such a consideration was not only null but void under the decree of the Civil Judge should be reversed. Consideration Suit for return of—Marriage brokerage—The plaintiff sued to recover the value of certain ornaments which he had presented to the defendant's daughter on his agreeing to marry her to plaintiff's brother. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant broke the agreement and gave his daughter in marriage to another person. He therefore asked for the restoration of the ornaments but the defendant refused to return them. Hence the present suit. Held that the suit was maintainable there being nothing in the plaintiff's claim which was either against morality or public policy RAMBHAU v TIMMATA

marriage in consideration of a money payment—Marriage brokerage—Illegal agreement—Public policy—The defendant was the eldest of three brothers whose mother on her marriage had been put out of the Lovana caste for having married a man belonging to a different caste. The defendant was anxious that he and his brothers should be re-admitted to the caste and in 1864 he entered into an agreement with the plaintiff who was at that time one of the setias of the caste whereby the latter agreed to procure the admission of the plaintiff and his brothers and get them married to girls belonging to the caste. In consideration for these services the defendant was to pay the plaintiff the sum of Rs 5000 which sum was to become due on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother to a girl of the caste and to be expended in purchasing caste utensils which were to be kept for the use of the caste. The plaintiff alleged that part of this money had been already paid to him and that on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother in 1880

52 ———— Agreement opposed to public policy—For the purpose of meeting the expenses of a suit for possession of immovable property the plaintiff who was in straitened circumstances agreed with the defendant that the latter in consideration of paying such expenses to the Court of first instance up to the High Court should have half the property and half the means profits with all his costs in the event of success. The suit was brought and was conducted by the plaintiff and the defendant jointly and was decreed by the High Court on appeal and the defendant obtained possession of half the property. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the half on the ground that the agreement was illegal and void. It appeared that the amount actually spent by the defendant in the former litigation was Rs 308 and that if that suit had failed he would have lost about Rs 600. It was found that the value of the half share of the property was about Rs 1000. Held that the agreement was unfair unreasonable extortionate and contrary to public policy within the meaning of s 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the land in suit on payment of (compensation for the advances made by the defendant in the former litigation with interest at 12 per cent per annum Chunni Kwar v Rup Singh [I L R 11 All 67] Lokender Singh v Rup Singh [I L R 11 All 113] referred to Hussain Baksh v Iqbal Hussain [I L R 11 All, 138]

84.—Compounding charge of fraudulent abstraction of documents—English Common Law rule—The plaintiff a resident of Pondicherry held a bond from one of the defendants (the second) for a certain sum of money. This bond the plaintiff charged the said defendant before the French legal authorities with having fraudulently abstracted from his house in Pondicherry and he obtained the arrest and extradition from the British territory of the second defendant as also of his brother the first defendant. The latter on his way to Pondicherry met the plaintiff and a settlement of accounts took place. The fifth sixth seventh and eighth defendants made themselves liable by executing the bond sued on for the sum found due to the plaintiff and took indemnity bonds to themselves from the first defendant the consideration being the agreement of the plaintiff to discontinue further proceedings in the criminal charge. The Court at Pondicherry sanctioned the agreement as a compromise by civil redress and suspended further proceedings in accordance with the law in force in the settlement. Held that the contract was enforceable the facts of the case not showing the compromise to be in its nature prejudicial as being in contravention of public policy under the Government of British India or injurious to the good order and interests of society in regard to the administration of public justice. 5 — Consideration—Post nuptial contracts—Contract partly legal and partly illegal—The defendant a Mahomedan husband executed a kabinama in favour of his wife by which he agreed among other things that he would maintain her and make over to her whatever money he should earn that he would never exercise any violence upon her that he would not take her away from home that it should not be within his power to marry or make any nika without her permission that he would do nothing without her permission and if he did she should be at liberty to divorce him and realize from him the amount of dower due to her and the nika would then be null and void. The plaintiff sued her husband upon this document, which was registered to recover from him all his earnings amounting to Rs55 after deducting Rs10 which she admitted having received from him. The lower Appellate Court held reversing the decision of the Munsif that the agreement had been made subsequently to the marriage and was though registered void for want of consideration. Held on appeal that the agreement being registered came within s 20 of the Contract Act and was not void on the ground that there was no consideration. Although some parts of the agreement might be illegal as being contrary to public policy and therefore void yet those which were legal could be enforced. (See Dyal Singh v Pande I L R. 9 Bom 17). The Court treated the suit as one to enforce that part only of the contract which was legal and considered the plaintiff entitled to recover a fair sum for her maintenance. POOROO BIKER v IYER BUKYU

Default in the mortgage executed in all proceedings and objection in the ground that the decree was in relation to the mortgage and all proceedings by the debtors. The terms of the arrangement were embodied in a petition in the court and by the court which thereupon struck off the case. The debtors having made default on the 13th September 1881 the decree holder applied for execution but the debtors had not agreed to the arrangement by which the application was barred under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code and the object of the suit was held to be valid. The decree holder then sought to recover the money for which execution had been taken out basing their suit upon the arrangement made by the defendants on the 10th February 1881. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on proof that there was a contract between the parties in good consideration and that the petition of 10th February 1881 though not a contract giving the plaintiffs a right of suit might be regarded as evidence corroborative, other evidence of such a contract. DEVI SINGH v. Held that such gift having been made by the donor out of natural love and affection for the donee and in order to secure a provision for him and his descendants and therefore for good consideration and having operated and the donor having reserved to himself sufficient property to satisfy the decree the mere fact that the donor reserved to himself no property within the jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree was not a ground for holding that such gift was fraudulent and not made in good faith and for setting it aside and allowing the decree holder to proceed against the property transferred by it. Held that such expenditure was not any consideration for the agreement within the meaning of s. 2 (d) of Act IX of 1872 and the agreement did not fall within cl. In September 1869 before the decree had been executed the judgment debtor admitting that a certain amount was due under the decree agreed to pay such amount by instalments; and that if default were made the decree should be executed for the whole amount thereof. Default having been made early in 1873 the decree holder applied at once for execution of the decree. On the 6th May 1873 a petition signed by the judgment debtor was preferred on his behalf to the Court executing the decree such petition being in effect as follows: "Execution case No. 18639 of 1873. In this case the decree holder has filed an application for execution of his decree in consequence of a default in payment of instalments; the fact is that the petitioner has failed to pay the instalments simply owing to illness otherwise he has no objection to the decree holder's demand; in future he will not fail to pay instalments; he has written a letter to plaintiff asking him to pardon his late default and to agree to realize the decree money by the instalments formerly fixed and to stay execution of the decree for the present. on the expiry of the five years or sooner determination of the service, they would not carry on within 800 miles from Madras any business carried on by the firm and also covenanted that on such expiry or sooner determination they would whenever requested by the firm so to do return to England. In pursuance of the agreement D and E went to Madras, and entered into the service of the firm. After it had continued for about 2½ years the service was determined by notice from the firm D and E then in violation of their said covenants refused to return to England though requested to do so by the firm and proceeded to set up and carry on their own account, business of the same kind as that carried on by the firm. Held in a suit by the firm against D and E for damages for breaches of the said covenants and for a perpetual injunction restraining D and E from carrying on in Madras, or within 800 miles from Madras any business carried on by the firm that treating the covenant in restraint of trade as one entered into in England it could not even if valid by the law of England be enforced in India inasmuch as its object was to restrain the law of India (s. 27 of Act IX of 1872). Held further that that covenant would have been void by the law of England because the limit of the restriction was unreasonable and as no narrower limit had been mentioned in the agreement this was not a case where the covenant could have been enforced within a narrower and reasonable limit. Held also that the covenant to return to England, except so far as it operated improperly in restraint of trade was a covenant the breach of which did not in any way cause damage to the firm and therefore such breach did not entitle them to any damages. OAKES v JACKSON I.L.R., 1 Mad 134

It was also agreed that if defendant did not sell the second batch of corahs through plaintiff the brokerage on the whole would be payable by defendant. Held that the agreement was not void either as being in restraint of trade or for uncertainty. BURKE v RAMSISSET SELL 23 W.R., 148

9 — Contract in restraint of trade—Construction of contract—A contract under which goods were purchased at a certain rate for the Cuttack market containing a stipulation that if the goods went to Madras, a higher rate should be paid for them was not one in restraint of trade; and where the purchaser sold the goods to a person in Calcutta who in turn resold to another who took them to Madras—Held that the original purchasers were under the terms of the contract, liable to pay at the enhanced rate. PARRY & COOK v DURACK CHAND I.L.R., 17 Cal., 320

10 — Partial restraint of trade—S. 27 of the Contract Act does away with the distinction observed in the English cases between partial and total restraint of trade and makes all contracts falling within its terms void unless they fall within its exceptions. The section was intended to prevent a partial as well as a total restraint of trade and two ghat serangs entered into a contract with J and five others who carried on the business of dabashes at Chittagong for the purpose of carrying on their respective businesses in unanimity and not injuring one another's trade. The contract which was to last for three years provided inter alia that J and B were to act as ghat serangs only and do no service to ships in any other capacity that J and the other dabashes were to give J five vessels secured by them every year for him to act as ghat serang and that J was only to act as ghat serang to the said five ships, and with the exception of ships for which he had previously acted as ghat serang he should not act as ghat serang or do any other services for ships belonging to any one else. The contract also contained provision as to the apportionment of the five ships so to be given to J amongst the various dabashes, and amongst such an agreement by J to give J the third ship he should secure. It also contained a provision for the payment of Rs 1000 as damages by any one breaking the contract to the person who should suffer by the breach. In a suit by J against J alleging a breach of the contract by the latter in not giving him the third ship as agreed, and claiming Rs 1000 by way of damages, J pleaded that the contract was void under s. 27 of the Contract Act as being in restraint of trade. Held that the contention was sound and that the suit must be dismissed.

The consideration for the promise to give the ship was the agreement to carry on any other business that it of a joint concern and that only in respect of his ship and the five agreed to be a partner to him by the dubash's. The effect of this agreement was absolutely to restrain A from carrying on the business of a dubash and to create a partial restraint on his power to carry on the business of a joint concern, and whether or not (even had the latter stipulation not been illegal) the contract would have been void under the provisions of s. 24 of the Act by reason of part of the consideration being the under-taking by A absolutely to refrain from carrying on the business of a dubash it was void for both reasons under the provisions of s. 27 and A was not entitled to recover any damages under it. SUBALI DUBASH v. The agreement was to be in force for a period of five years. In a suit by the merchants for an injunction to restrain him, the licensee from selling his salt to others, — Held that whether or not the first of these clauses was invalid under s. 27 of the Contract Act it was separate from the second clause which was not bad as being in restraint of trade. MACKENZIE v. 13. ————— Agreement to share profits of trade—Restraint of trade—Four persons each of whom owned a ginning factory entered into an agreement which (inter alia) provided that they should charge a uniform rate of Rs 80 per palla for ginning cotton that of this sum Rs 80 should be treated as the actual cost of ginning and that the remaining Rs 20 should be carried to a common fund to be divided each year between the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement but the defendant although he had carried the Rs 20 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the sum. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the agreement was in restraint of trade and was therefore not enforceable. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his share from the defendant. The only agreement sought to be enforced in this suit was the agreement to divide the profits. That was a lawful agreement founded upon consideration (viz. the mutual agreement to share each other's profits) and it might be enforced. PER FARRAN C.J.—I am inclined to agree with the lower Appellate Court that the stipulation that the parties to the agreement are bound to charge at the rate of Rs 80 per palla for ginning cotton is a stipulation in restraint of trade. PER CANDY J.—I am not satisfied that the agreement in question was, as a fact, in restraint of trade and further to accurately quote the words of s. 27 of the Contract Act I am not satisfied that it was an agreement by which any one was restrained from exercising a lawful trade. HARISHAI MANIKAL v. B sued for an injunction to restrain him. Held that this was not a contract in restraint of trade and that B was entitled to an injunction restraining A from practising in Zanzibar on his own account during the period of three years. CHARLES WORTH v. appointed by the plaintiffs. Previous to the making of the award the plaintiffs under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 had the submission to arbitration made a rule of the Court of Common Pleas. In a suit in which the plaintiffs claim was for damages awarded by the arbitrators and incurred by the plaintiffs in respect of the breach of the contract—Held the award was invalid. The making the submission a rule of Court has not the effect of depriving a party of his right to revoke at any time before the award the authority of arbitrators whom he has appointed still less could it have any effect to prevent him from declining to appoint an arbitrator. Held also the contract was not within the scope of s 23 Act IX of 1872. To make an agreement conform to except 1 of that section the jurisdiction of the Courts must be excluded in all respects except the matter which is the result of the arbitrators award. Agreements which exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts until an award is made as in Scott v Avery 2 Jur. 481 S 815 5 H L C 811 are within that exception and are not illegal. Quare—Whether it was intended by that exception to authorize the Court to entertain a suit for specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration S 23 Act IX of 1872 does not forbid an action for damages for the breach of such an agreement. KOROLER v CORINGA OIL COMPANY

1. — Right to rescind—Refusal to perform—Time of essence of contract—Suit for damages for non delivery—S 39 of the Contract Act only enacts what was the law in England and in India before the Act was passed—viz that where a party to a contract refuses altogether to perform or is disabled from performing his part of it the other party has a right to rescind. In a suit for damages for the non delivery of linseed upon a contract the terms of which as to payment were cash on delivery part delivery had been made by the defendants and a sum of Rs 1000 had been paid on account by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then made a claim against the defendants for excess refraction and the defendants thereupon refused to deliver the remainder of the linseed unless the plaintiffs paid the full amount owing for the portion that had been delivered. The plaintiffs declined to accept these terms and the defendants then cancelled the contract. Held that there was not such a refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract as to entitle the defendants to rescind under s 39 of the Contract Act. SOOLTAN CHAND v SCHILLER [I L R 4 Calc 252 B C I L R. 387]

Of the balance of Rs 500 B was to retain Rs 200 in payment of a previous debt of A due to him and the balance of Rs 300 was to be paid to A. B paid the said Rs 100 retained the Rs 500 but neglected to pay the said Rs 500 to C who sued A and recovered the debt by attachment and sale of A's moveable property. After eight years from the date of the mortgage B brought a suit to recover the interest due and the mortgage on Rs 300 only. Held that under s 39 of the Contract Act A was entitled to cancel the contract of mortgage owing to B's conduct but that he was bound to give up the benefit he had received viz Rs 300, and pay interest thereon up to the date of cancellation. B was not entitled to treat the original mortgage as a mortgage in force with all its stipulations for Rs 500 instead of Rs 300 and on that view to sue for interest alone. SUBBA RAO v DEVU SETHI [I L R 18 Mad, 126]

1 ———— Suit against joint contractors—Res judicata—A suit in which a decree has been obtained against one of the several joint makers of a promissory note is a bar to a subsequent suit against the others. The effect of s 43 of the Contract Act is not to create a joint and several liability in such a case. That section merely prohibits the defendant in such a suit pleading in abatement and thus places the liability arising from the breach of a joint contract and the liability arising from a tort on the same footing. The rule laid down in the case of King v Hoare 18 M and W 494 and Brinsmead v Harrison L R 7 C P 547 is one of principle not merely of procedure. HENDRO COOMAR MULLICK v RAJENDRO LALL MOONSHI

In February 1877 F at the request of his wife as compensation to his sons for the loss of their interests in the property sold bond fide assigned to his sons his share in a house No 9 A Street. In October and November 1877 M and S each obtained decrees against F for bond fide trading debts and issued execution against the house No 9 A Street. The mother of the infant sons intervened and the attachment was raised and M and S were referred to a regular suit to establish their claims. In January 1878 F was declared insolvent. M and S respectively sued to have it declared that the house No 9 A Street was liable to be attached and sold in satisfaction of their decrees against F. 1 Breach of contract—Impossibility to perform a portion arising after execution—A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant for a specified number of years in certain specified lands situated in different villages with respect to portion of which lands the plaintiff was a sub tenant only subsequently during the continuance of the contract the plaintiff lost possession of those lands through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him under the above circumstances to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part—Held that such a case came within the provisions of cl 2 s 56 of Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act) and that the mere fact that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord and so retained possession of the land was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as to take it out of the provisions of that section. INDER PERSHAD SINGH & CAMPBELL

2 Contract to carry passengers in ship—Passengers infected with disease—Excuse for non performance of contract—Implied term in contract—Performance becomes illegal—Penal Code (XLV of 1860) s 269—By a contract made with the plaintiffs the defendants agreed to carry from Bombay to Jeddah in their steamer Mobile 500 pilgrims who were about to arrive in Bombay from Singapore in the plaintiffs' ship the Sura. The defendants were to be paid at the rate of Rs 26 per head and the ship Mobile was to receive the pilgrims on the 3rd May 1888. The Sura arrived in Bombay on the 1st May with about 600 pilgrims on board and on the 2nd May the plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants that 500 of them were ready to go on board the Mobile on the next day in accordance with the contract. The defendants refused to receive the pilgrims on board the Mobile on the ground that they had come to Bombay in the Sura and that during the voyage of that ship to Bombay there had been an outbreak of small pox on board that the 500 pilgrims had been in close contact with those who had been suffering from the disease and that on the 3rd May fresh cases were occurring among the pilgrims brought from Singapore. They pleaded that under these circumstances they were bound to ship and carry the 500 pilgrims in violation (1) that it was an implied term in the contract that the 500 pilgrims should be free from small pox or other dangerous disease and (2)

that the performance of the contract had under the circumstances become unlawful (s 269 of the Penal Code and s 56 of the Contract Act). Held that the defendants were bound to carry out the contract. In the absence of proof, that a term providing that the pilgrims should be free from small pox was to be implied by the usage of the pilgrim carrying trade there could be no reason for implying it. The possibility that some of the 500 pilgrims might have the germ of the disease in them owing to their exposure to infection might make carrying them more expensive and onerous but it was a contingency which from the very nature of the trade must have been known to the defendants and if they wished to provide a guarantee they should have done so by express terms. Held also that the performance of the contract had not become unlawful. The risk of disease was not greater than would necessarily be incurred in every crowded emigrant ship. But even if special precautions were desirable under the circumstances it was for the defendants who had entered into an absolute agreement to have taken them. BOHRAH AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO & PURBATHING COMPANY

2 and s 63—Devolution—Contract Devolution of—Satisfaction of contract—The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs 1,330 from the defendant as a fact that after the due date of the bond an arrangement was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to accept in satisfaction of what was due to him at the time of the arrangement Rs 400 in cash and a fresh bond for Rs 701 payable by instalments and it was further found that the plaintiff never intended or agreed to accept the naked sum of Rs 1,330 from the defendant to pay the Rs 400 and to give the bond for Rs 701. The defendant did not pay the Rs 400 or give the bond but pleaded that there had been a novation of the original contract by reason of the subsequent agreement and that the suit being based on the original contract could not be maintained, and he relied on the provisions of ss 62 and 63 of the Contract Act in support of his contention. Held that neither section had any bearing on the case and that upon the breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made and upon the non performance by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed. Held further that s. 6 of the Contract Act is merely a legislative expression of the common law and the provisions thereof do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to.

The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale and be allowed to redeem alleging that on the day before the sale the first defendant had orally promised and agreed to postpone the sale for four days and that the second defendant had notice of this fact before he purchased the property. Held that the said promise or agreement if made by the mortgagee was not an extension of time for the performance of the plaintiff's (mortgagor's) promise to him which was to pay the mortgage debt on the 28th December 1896 but was an agreement to refrain from exercising for a stated period the right of sale arising from non performance and therefore s. 63 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) did not apply. TRINAK GANGADHAR HAMADE v. He became bound to pay that which he had retained in payment of his land the date of the decree giving the date of the failure of the existing consideration within the meaning of art. 97 of the Limitation Act 1877. This mortgagee however, obtained a decree and order in execution for the sale of the other property on which his mortgage was the second. Of the latter property the plaintiffs who also represented the first mortgagee had become purchasers and they filed objections to the sale. These were disallowed and they thereupon paid into Court money sufficient to satisfy the decree in order to prevent the sale. Held that this was not a voluntary payment nor a payment of money equitably due but one made under compulsion of law and under pressure of the execution proceedings. There was nothing to show that the purchaser purchased a mere equity of redemption nor that he was aware of the mortgage. Before S obtained possession of the property the mortgagee sued to enforce his lien and obtained a decree and attached the property in execution and it was advertised for sale. S satisfied the decree which was equal in amount to the purchase money and brought a suit to obtain possession of the property. The Court of first instance decreed the claim conditionally on the payment of the purchase money to the defendants but the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree being of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to an unconditional decree and its decree was affirmed in special appeal. MAHA ALI v MAHOMED SAHIB KHAN

The amount was levied by the defendant through the assistance of the mamlatdar under Bombay Act III of 1869 s. 8. The defendant contended that in consequence of a demand from Government he had paid local cess on the whole of his talukh including the village in which the plaintiffs' lands were situated and was therefore entitled under ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) to recover from them the amount which he had paid to Government as a portion of the cess which rateably fell upon their lands. It was found that the defendant was not the proprietor of the lands held by the plaintiffs and that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between them, also that defendant paid local cess for the plaintiffs' lands fraudulently and with the intention of thereby making evidence of title to their lands knowing that he had no lawful or just claim to them. Held that the defendant was not a person interested in the payment of the money made by him to Government within the meaning of s. 69 of the Contract Act assuming that a portion of that sum was demanded by Government in respect of the plaintiffs' wanta lands and that they were bound by law to pay it to Government. Held further that the defendant did not lawfully make the payment within the meaning of s. 70 of the Act inasmuch as he did so fraudulently and dishonestly. *DESAI HEMACHANDRA s. The plaintiff's jaghir was in point of time subsequent to the defendant's inam. Act VII of 1863. Under s. 9 of that Act a notice was served upon the plaintiff by the Collector in respect of the village and he accepted the settlement provided in ss. 2 and 11 of the Act. Government, accordingly, granted the village to him at the summary settlement of two annas in the rupee of the full assessment. No notice was served upon the defendant under the Act nor did the plaintiff inform the defendant of the notice which the plaintiff had received in respect of the village. The certificate issued by the Collector to the plaintiff previously to the grant of the sanad regarding the settlement contained the following passage—Before the villages (Venu and Sanya) were granted in jaghir lands were held by patta inamdar over which the jaghirdar has no right. They are entered in the sanad only for the purpose of receiving the settlement and paying it over to the Sarkar. In 1877 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the amount of three years' summary settlement which he (plaintiff) had paid to Government on account of the defendant's land. Held that ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) did not apply to the case. *KAMALUDDIN s. Mortgage—Decree enforcing hypothecation—Satisfaction of decree by person not subject to legal obligation thereunder—Suit for contribution brought by 30 persons against judgment debtor—Gratuitous payment—The widow of D a separated Hindu hypothecated certain immovable property which had belonged to her husband. The immediate reversioners to D's estate were his nephew S and the three sons of his brother O. After the widow's death the mortgagee put his bond in suit impleading as defendants S two of S's four sons and the three sons of O. Only the three last mentioned persons resisted the suit and the mortgagees obtained a decree directing the sale of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his claim. From the operation of this decree S was wholly exempted and his sons were made liable only to pay their own costs. Before any sale in execution of the decree could take place the sons of S paid the amount of the decree into Court thus saving the property from sale. They subsequently sued the sons of O for contribution in respect of this payment. It was found that at the time when the payment was made S was a member of a joint Hindu family with the defendants and that his sons the plaintiffs had at that time no interest in the property by transfer from him. Held that at the time of the payment the plaintiffs could not properly be regarded as in the position of co-mortgagors with the defendants so as to have an equitable lien upon the property they had saved from sale that it was not a case of a payment which the defendants were bound to make in which the plaintiffs were interested within the meaning of s. 69 of the Contract Act; and that therefore the fiction of an implied request by the defendants to the plaintiff to make the payment could not be imported into the case and the plaintiffs were not entitled to contribution. Held also that there was no such relationship between the parties as would create or justify the inference of any right in the plaintiffs to look to the defendants for compensation so as to make s. 70 of the Contract Act applicable and that if the plaintiffs as mere volunteers chose to pay the money not for the defendants but for themselves they could not claim the benefits of that section. The principle of the decision in Parashram Singh v. Ali Ahmed I L R. 4 All. 59 has been recognized and provided for in the Transfer of Property Act. By the use of the word lawfully in s. 70 of the Contract Act the Legislature had in contemplation cases in which a person held such a relation to another as either directly to create or reasonably to justify the inference that by some act done for another person the person doing the act was entitled to look to the person to whom the property was transferred for compensation. See *Lat Sahas L. K eventually established her title to the property obtained possession and recovered the rents from the tenants and B was obliged to refund the same. Subsequently B sued A to recover the sum which he had paid on account of revenue. Held that the claim did not fall within the provisions of ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act and the fact that the plaintiff had been a loser by his wrongful act or that the defendant had been benefited by the payment he made would give him no right of action against her. *Tilak Chari v. In such suit it was contended that the payments were merely voluntary and that the plaintiff could not recover them. Held that the plaintiff was interested in making the payments and was therefore entitled to recover under a 69 of the Contract Act. Held further that s. 70 of the Contract Act applied to the case inasmuch as the word does in that section included payments of money and also that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under s. 9 of the revenue sale law as he believed in good faith that his interest would be endangered by a sale taking place. The liability of a landlord under s. 9 of the revenue sale law to recoup a person paying Government revenue for him does not depend upon the question of whether the money was originally deposited or not but accrues upon its being credited in payment of the arrears. *Smith v. In paying the money the treasury officer neglected no reasonable precaution nor was he in any way guilty of carelessness. Held that the defendant was bound to repay the money received by him and that he could not defend himself by the plea that he had paid it to his principal nor could the Court allow that the circumstance that the principal was himself a servant of the plaintiff and in the course of his employment obtained facilities for committing the fraud relieved the defendant from his liability SUGGAN CHAND v GOVERNMENT NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES I.L.R. 1 All. 78

It was afterwards decided, in a suit between the parties that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the patta and that the defendants were entitled to the whole sixteen annas thereof. Subsequently to this decision the defendants in paying up the arrears of revenue due on the patta took the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 8th of March 1876 and paid in only as much as together with the previous payment made up the whole arrears. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover from the defendants the amount of the payment made to the zamindar on the 8th of March 1876. Held that the payment was not a voluntary payment and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover NOBIS KRISHNA DASE v MOH. In pursuance of this agreement B paid a sum of money to A but upon discovering that the alleged will was not a will at all sued to recover back the money so paid by her. Held that under the circumstances the taking of the agreement was a fraud upon B that the payment of the sum of money by B was not a voluntary payment and could be recovered back and that the Court could not apportion the amount (if any) that might be claimable by B for work done under the agreement RUPABAI v PANDURAM KIRPASHAN KARR

In order to prevent the sale he then paid the amount of the defendant's decree into Court and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court to prevent the sale. ss 78 and ss 77 83, 84 and 107—
Re sale Notice of Right of unpaid vendors—No nominal damages—The defendant purchased from the plaintiffs a cargo of Watson's Hartley steam coal at £121 per ton to arrive by ship Grecian but on its arrival the defendant on being called upon to do so refused to take delivery on the ground that the usual certificate that the coal was what it was stated to be did not accompany the cargo. The plaintiffs thereupon gave notice to the defendant that unless delivery were taken the coal would be sold on his account and at his risk, and on the defendant repeating his refusal to take delivery the plaintiffs caused the coal to be sold and it was purchased in the name of A & Co for £13 per ton.
In a suit which was stated in the plaint to be for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs on the re-sale the Court found that the plaintiffs themselves were the real purchasers and that the sale had taken place without proper notice and under the circumstances was invalid.
Held both in the lower Court and on appeal that the plaintiffs had by the way in which they had dealt with the coal rendered themselves accountable to the defendant in respect thereof and that notwithstanding the defendant had committed a breach of the contract in refusing to take delivery of the coal the plaintiffs were bound to give an account of the coal and prove that they had sustained a loss on the re-sale and on their omission to do so they were not entitled to recover any damages. Held on appeal per MARKER J that the plaintiffs were not entitled to put aside the sale as invalid and treat the case as one for damages for breach of contract. Under the circumstances they were not entitled to even nominal damages. The mere shipment on board the Grecian did not pass the property in the coal to the defendant under s 77 of Act IX of 1872. Per POTTER J— Whether by virtue of the contract and the subsequent appropriation and shipment the property in the coal passed or did not pass to the defendant within the meaning of s 84 or s 83 of Act IX of 1872 even if the sale were invalid the plaintiffs were not entitled to suing their conduct in dealing with the coal and the concealment of their interest in the purchase and in the

became of the coal to recover any damages. BUCHANAN

*Penalty—Suit by a joint proprietor for arrears of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s 29 (b)—Abolition of rent prior to—Covenant for a higher rate—Enhancement of rent—Bengal Rent Act (VIII of 1869) s 5—In a kabuliat executed in 1881, it was stipulated that upon the expiry of the term of seven years fixed therein a fresh lease should be executed that should the defendant cultivate the lands without executing a fresh kabuliat he would pay rent at the rate of Rs bigba (a rate much higher than that fixed for the term).
No fresh kabuliat was executed on expiry of the term and the plaintiff a part proprietor collecting rent separately brought this suit for arrears of rent at the new rate of Rs 4. The defendant objected inter alia that he plaintiff being a part proprietor, was not entitled to sue for enhanced rent and that the stipulation for the higher rate was a mere threat and not intended to be carried out. The first Court gave a decree at an enhanced rate or an addition of two annas in the rupee in terms of s 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal the Subordinate Judge dismissed the whole suit on the ground that the suit being one for enhanced rent and the plaintiff a part proprietor the suit did not lie. Held that the kabuliat having been executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the present case did not come within the operation of that Act and the plaintiff although a part proprietor could bring this suit. See
Chander Chakrabarty v. Chandra Dutt I L R 1
19 Cal 755 followed. Held by PATTER J and GROSE JJ (PATTER J dissenting)—That the additional rent was intended to be enforceable only on default to execute a fresh kabuliat and the so-called agreement to pay at the enhanced rate of Rs 4 was in the nature of a penalty. Held by PATTER J—The plea that the rate of Rs 4 was a penalty was not taken by the defendant in his written statement, and in any case the stipulation did not come within the purview of s 74 of the Indian Contract Act and the suit was not for compensation for breach of contract but for rent at a rate which the defendant has agreed to pay from a certain time. Held also, that s 29 (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no retrospective effect and does not apply to the present kabuliat which was executed before the passing of that Act. That s 29 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 did not bar an agreement by an occupancy raiyat to pay what ever he pleased for the use of his land. See 1 L R. 13 All. 237

B paid to A certain earnest money and agreed to remove the whole of the rice after weighing on or before a certain date. B transferred his contract to C who through his servant took delivery from A of 130 maunds paying to A Rs 1000 but subsequently refused to take delivery of the residue as he alleged it to be of inferior quality to that contracted for. The golah was accidentally burnt and the residue of the rice destroyed. In a suit by A to recover from B the balance of the purchase money (after deducting the payments made) under the contract—Held that the sale was complete and the ownership with the risk of loss in the rice sold passed to B under ss 8 and 88 of the Contract Act because the contract was for ascertained goods for which B had paid earnest money and taken part delivery and that it was not open to B to rescind the sale on alleging and proving a breach of warranty on the part of A unless he could bring the case within the provisions of s 19; but that he was precluded from so doing because he might have discovered the inferiority of the quality of the rice by using ordinary diligence. SHOSHI MOHUN PAL CHOWDHURY v DOSO KRISHNA PODDAR I L R. 4 Calc 801

B & Co took delivery of and paid for only one bale but rejected the others. M & R brought a suit for the price of the four bales rejected. Held that the property in the goods did not pass to the defendant by the terms of the contract nor was the delivery that was taken by him of the one bale a delivery of part of the goods within the meaning of ss 78 and 92 of the Contract Act. The suit therefore did not lie. Held also that the question whether the defendant was entitled to refuse the goods—in other words whether the goods were according to the contract or not—was one that was unnecessary for the purposes of the present suit but it would have been otherwise if the suit were one for damages on the ground of the defendant's refusal to accept the goods. A purchaser's right to reject goods by reason of their not answering the description in the contract may be independent of the question whether the property in the goods has passed to him or not. MITCHELL REID & Co. v BULDEO DASS KHETTER I L R. 15 Calc. 1

1 ——— except 1—Possession of goods by person other than owner—Title conveyed by vendor to vendee—The plaintiff let to D a piano on hire on the following terms—At Rs 30 per month if duly paid for and kept three years shall then become the property of hirer. These terms were embodied in a voucher which was signed by D. The monthly hire was not regularly paid and the plaintiffs sued for and obtained a decree for a portion of the hire up to May 1873. Subsequently in that month D sold the piano to the defendant who obtained delivery of it in June. In a suit by the plaintiff in trover for conversion of the piano the Judge found that the defendant acted in good faith. Held that the possession acquired by D was not possession by consent of the owner within the meaning of s 108 of Act IX of 1872 except 1 and that he did not by sale to the defendant transfer the ownership in the piano to him. Except 1 of s 108 does not apply where there is only a qualified possession such as a hire of goods has or where the possession is for a specific purpose. GREENWOOD v HOLQUETTE 11 B L R 42 20 W R, 467

2 ——— Possession with consent of owner—Bailment—Bailee—Sale by bailee of goods bailed—Title of vendee—The general rule laid down by s 108 of the Contract Act that no seller can give to a buyer a better title than he has himself is qualified by except 1 to that section. But the possession contemplated by that exception does not extend to every case of detention of chattels with the owner's consent. The exception has particular relation to the cases of persons allowed by owners to have the custody of property or possession under such circumstances as may naturally induce others to regard them as owners and constituting some degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners. Where, however, the detention of a chattel is allowed for a particular limited purpose there is not a possession such as is required by the exception. In the case of a gratuitous bailment of a chattel the possession remains constructively with the owner. S left with C a buffalo and a calf to be taken care of during his absence from home. C sold the animals to M. S sued to recover them. Held that the bailment by S to C was a gratuitous one or else a mere custody by C for S that S was therefore at the time of sale in constructive possession of the animals and C could not transfer to M an ownership that he had not himself. SHANKAR MURLIDHAR v MOHANLAL JADURAM

The plaintiff and his wife had lived together and the latter with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff had charge of the jewel-case containing the ornaments in question which however belonged exclusively to the plaintiff. Without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff his wife pledged these ornaments with the defendant as security for the repayment of certain promissory notes passed by her in favour of the defendant. After her death the defendant claimed payment of the promissory notes from the plaintiff. The plaintiff refused to pay and sued the defendant for the value of the ornaments. Held that the plaintiff's wife had not in the beginning, nor did she subsequently acquire such possession as would validate the pledge by virtue of the provisions of s. 178 of the Contract Act. To create a pledge under that section the pledge must be in actual possession of the goods merely custody will not suffice. SKAGER v HUKMA HESSA

1 CO-SHARERS LIABILITY OF

1 Liability under decree for costs—Division of liability—A suit having been brought before a Subordinate Judge against co-sharers in a joint property for contribution on account of costs levied from plaintiffs in a suit which had been preferred by all the co-sharers (plaintiffs and defendants) together a decree was given ordering the defendants to contribute per capita in equal shares. On application made to the Subordinate Judge's successor a review was granted and additional evidence called for as to the respective shares of the parties in the property. Held that the parties were liable for contribution according to their respective interests in the property and not simply per capita MURRAY ALI v. TOFUZZUL HOSSAIN 16 W.R., 78

2 Allegation and proof of specific liability—In a suit for contribution where a joint decree cannot be passed the specific liability of each co-sharer must be not only alleged but clearly established PITAMBAR CUTCHERBETTER v. BHATTARAK NATH PALLET 15 W.R., 221

3 Unequal distribution in execution of decree—Proportional liability—In execution of a decree for an enhanced rent against the holders of a joint jumma, the landlord put up for sale and caused to be sold a taluk which was also the joint property of the same parties. One of these parties accordingly sued others of them on the allegation that his share of the property sold exceeded the lands occupied by him in the joint jumma, and asked the Court to give him a joint and several decree against all the defendants for the entire amount of the difference. Held that plaintiff could not be entitled to such a decree but should have asked that the defendants might be directed to contribute to him in proportion to their respective shares if his claim was well founded. But as defendants allowed that although plaintiff held that small quantity it was compensated for in other ways it was for plaintiff to show that he did not derive from or by virtue of his share in the joint jumma a profit or interest.

In special appeal it was contended inter alia that the principle of the decree was wrong and that the defendants were liable only for that portion of the land of which they were in wrongful possession Held that as in the original suit there was no plea that the lands were in the occupation of the answering defendants in any other way than under their zamindari title the only way in which the liabilities could be awarded was by making each party pay according to the shares they held in the parent zamindari OSHOY HANT LALOREE v. sued the mortgagor and the plaintiff for the mortgage money claiming to recover it by the sale of the portion of such estate purchased by the plaintiff. Having obtained a decree the mortgagee caused a portion of such portion to be sold in the execution of the decree. In order to save the remainder of such portion from sale in the execution of the decree the plaintiff satisfied the judgment debt. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for contribution. Held that assuming that the mortgagee by not including the defendants in his suit upon the mortgage bond had put it out of his power to proceed at law by another suit on the basis of the same bond against the properties in the possession of the defendants as purchasers it did not follow that the plaintiff's equitable right to recover a fair contribution from the defendants on the ground of his having paid the whole debt due to the mortgagee was thereby invalidated. JAGAT NARAIN v. Before this decree was executed L obtained a decree against D in execution of which his two bhuwas share was put up for sale on the 20th June 1878 and was purchased by A. Subsequently the mortgagee applied for execution of his decree and D's two bhuwas share were attached and advertised for sale in execution thereof. In order to save such share from sale A on the 29th June 1878 satisfied the mortgagee's decree. He then sued P as co-debtor to recover half the amount he had paid by the sale of D's two bhuwas. Held that inasmuch as when A discharged the whole amount of the mortgage debt he not only became entitled to a credit of half of such amount from P but also to the rights of the mortgagee was entitled to a credit of  $\frac{1}{2}$  of two bhuwas share of the village as claimed. JANAM SINGH ALI AHMAD I. 29 ——— Mortgage debt—Apportionment of decree according to share of purchased property—Payment of money for which other persons are liable—In execution of a decree the right, title and interest in two parcels of property of a judgment debtor who had previous to the attachment executed a single mortgage thereof to A were sold and B and C respectively purchased them at different prices. A sued the mortgagor and the purchasers B and C for enforcing his lien on the two parcels of property. The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but on appeal the order was Appeal decreed. A entered into a compromise with B, and entered satisfaction of a moiety of the decree. He afterwards issued execution of the other moiety against C and compelled him to pay. C now sued B for recovery of the proportion of the amount paid by him to A but which according to the valuation of the respective properties should have fallen into the share of B. Held that the debt due upon the mortgage bond was a general burden upon the two properties, for which no portion of those two properties was more liable than the other. Held also that, as between the plaintiff and defendant the liability was joint, but several in proportion to the respective values of the properties and that the plaintiff having been compelled to pay money for which the property of the defendant was legally liable was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant. BHAIJAN CHANDRA MADAK v. A summary order of an inferior Court for the execution of a decree may be conclusive as between the decree holder who obtained it and those against whom it was made but is not necessarily so against the latter as between themselves only such an order has not necessarily the same effect, so far as contribution is concerned as if it were the original decree in the suit. WYD COOMAR SINGH v GAN A PERSHAD [3 W R., 207]

43 ——— Payment of debt by one debtor—Partisanship of property among debtors—Where three had been disputes respecting family property and an agreement was entered into by which the parties made a division of the property and agreed to pay a debt in equal shares, and one of the parties had been made under a decree to pay the whole debt.—Held that he had a clear right to recover from the others their proportion of the debt unless they could show some answer to his claim. DOMAN SISON v KASHEERAM [1 W R., P. 44 ——— Joint liability for a debt paid by one debtor in suit for debt—Costs—If one of several persons jointly liable for a debt is sued and is compelled to satisfy the debt and the costs of the suit, he can only call on the others to contribute in respect of the debt and not in respect of the costs. POTTER v PETERSON [8 N W., 183]

48 ——— Separate suits where joint debtors are sued for debt paid by one—Ascertainment of shares—Ordinarily claims for contribution should be brought in separate suits against the individual contributors, but there may be cases where by reason of special difficulty in the ascertainment of the shares, convenience may suggest a departure from the ordinary rule of separate suits. In those cases the ascertainment of the shares shall form a portion of the relief sought for. FRASER BAI v MAHOMED ALI KHAN [5 N W., 215]

50 ——— Costs of suit rendered necessary by wrong doers—The plaintiff and defendants jointly opposed and prevented the sale of a zamindar from measuring certain lands. The zamindar thereupon brought a suit against them to have his right to measure declared, and obtained a joint decree with costs. In execution of the decree for costs, the property of the plaintiff was attached, and he duly paid the whole amount due for costs. The plaintiff now sued the defendants for contribution. Held that with a suit would lie. PRITHI PRADAR v SAJOO LORAMANICK [11 B L R., 345] [20 W R., 235]

51 ——— Wrong-doers with intention—How far ex parte of right—The question as to whether as between persons against whom a joint decree has been passed there is a joint contribution at all depends upon the question whether the defendants in the first case were wrong-doers in the sense that they knew or ought to have known that they were doing an illegal or wrongful act. In such case no suit for contribution will lie. If it be held that in the first case the defendants were not guilty of wrong in that sense but acted in ignorance of the law, then a suit for contribution will lie. Held that the defendants in the first case were not guilty of wrong in that sense but acted in ignorance of the law, then a suit for contribution will lie. Held that the defendants in the first case were not guilty of wrong in that sense but acted in ignorance of the law, then a suit for contribution will lie.

In each case the Court should enquire what share they each took in the transaction because according to circumstances one or more of them might be excused altogether or in part from contributing—as for instance one of them might have acted as a servant and by the command of the others; or the others might have been the only persons benefited by the wrongful act; in which case those who were benefited or who ordered the servant to do the act would not be entitled to contribution. S 23 of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to a case in which the persons to whom a right of suit is assigned after the institution of the suit obtains leave to carry on the suit. SURAJ SINGH v IMRIT TEWARI

52. — Unintentional wrong-doer

Ignorance of illegal act—An objection to the attachment and sale of certain immovable property raised by one who claimed to have purchased the same at a sale in execution of a prior decree was disallowed on the ground that under the prior decree the rights of one only of the present judgment debtors had been sold and purchased by the objector. In accordance with this order two-thirds of the property under attachment were sold and the objector thereupon brought a regular suit for a declaration of his right as a purchaser of the whole property in execution of the prior decree. To this suit he impleaded as defendants the decree-holder and the judgment debtors. The suit was decreed and in the result the decree-holder alone was compelled to pay the whole of the costs. Subsequently he brought a suit for contribution in respect of these costs making defendants to the suit (i) B one of his co-defendants in the previous suit personally and as heir of A who was another of these co-defendants, (ii) N and (iii) S these two being sued in the character of heirs of A. Held that inasmuch as the rule preventing one wrong doer from claiming contribution against another was confined to cases where the person seeking relief must be presumed to have known that he was acting illegally and in this case there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff in attaching and advertising the property for sale in execution of his decree knew he was doing an illegal act but the inferences were all the other way he was fully entitled in law to maintain the suit and to recover from the defendants the proportionate amount of the costs which he had to pay for them. Merryweather v Nixon 2 Sm. 54. — Costs of suit in which false defence is set up—Where a decree for costs against two defendants jointly was executed against one of them who had set up a false defence in the suit in collusion with the other and the former brought a suit to recover one moiety of the amount paid by him from the latter—Held that the suit would not lie. VAYANGARA PADAKA VITTEL MANJA v PARIYANGOT PADIVOGARA KURUPPACH KADUGOCHEN NAYAR

55. — Decree for costs—Evidence to prove collusion—Proceedings in former case not between same parties—Admissibility in evidence of finding in former case—S granted to G and A a patna of a certain share in a zamindari and thereupon P brought a suit against G and A for specific performance of an agreement to grant to him (P) a patna of the same share. That suit was decreed with costs the whole of which were realized from G. In a suit for contribution brought by G against A and A the lower Appellate Court found that G and A had conspired in setting up a false defence in the former suit in order to defeat P's claim. Held in second appeal that assuming such collusion was proved the suit for contribution was not maintainable. G and A being joint wrong-doers. Vayangara Padaka Vittel Manja v Pariyangot Padivogara Kuruppath Kadugochen Nayar I L. R. 7 Mad. 89 followed. Brajendra Kumar Roy Chowdhry v Ras Behari Roy Chowdhry I L. R. 13 Cal. 300 disapproved. The only evidence on which the lower Appellate Court had acted as establishing such collusion was the finding of the Court in the former suit (gathered from the grounds of appeal in that suit). Held that that finding was inadmissible in evidence as laid down in Sunder Nath Pal Chowdhry v Braja Nath Pal Chowdhry I L. R. 13 Cal. 302 being the finding in a case in which G and A were all co-defendants and a third party the plaintiff and the case was remanded for the determination of the question whether G and A were wrong doers and were as such held liable for the costs of the former suit. GOURD CHUNDER SUNDY v SRIGOBIND CHOWDHRY I L. ## 3 PAYMENT OF JOINT DEBT BY ONE DEBTOR—continued

A summary order of an inferior Court for the execution of a decree may be conclusive as between the decree holder who obtained it and those against whom it was made but is not necessarily so against the latter as between themselves only. Such an order has not necessarily the same effect so far as contribution is concerned as if it were the original decree in the suit. NUND COOMAR SINGH v. GANGA PRASAD

43 ——— Payment of debt by one debtor—Partition of property among debtors—Where there had been disputes respecting family property and an agreement was entered into by which the parties made a division of the property and agreed to pay a debt in equal shares and one of the parties had been made under a decree to pay the whole debt—Held that he had a clear right to recover from the others their proportion of the debt unless they could show some answer to his claim. *DOMAN SINGH v. 45 ——— Payment to stay sale of arrears of rent—Liability of person in use of occupation—The land of a jote jama belonging to plaintiff and one P having been attached in satisfaction of a joint decree for arrears of rent plaintiff deposited the entire amount of the decree. He then sued M who had obtained P's share of the jote contribution on the ground that M was in use of occupation. Held that the case against M was met by the plea that he was not a party to the decree which the decree was obtained. *GURDAS SINGH CH. The original defendants having been obliged to pay the whole amount of these costs in execution brought a suit for contribution against the representatives of the intervenor. Held that in the absence of any contract or agreement there was no equity between the parties to justify a suit for contribution. KRISHNA CHANDER CHATTERJEE

The amount of this decree was levied by execution from A alone who thereupon brought a suit for contribution against his co-defendants in the former suit. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff and the defendants had been joint wrong doers and that no suit for contribution would lie between them. On second appeal to the High Court—Held that the rule of law relied on by the Courts below had no application to the circumstances of the present case and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain his action. BROJENDRO KUMAR ROY CHOWDERY v RASH BEHARY ROY CHOWDERY [I L R. 18 Calc 300]

2 ——— Appropriation of goods as to which there is dispute—Delivery to party with out title—K received into his godown certain goods belonging to the plaintiff and in charge of his servant, concerning which there was a dispute between the plaintiff's agent and B of which circumstances K was aware and he advanced money to B on the security of such goods which were subsequently delivered to B and sold by him with the acknowledgment of K and notwithstanding the plaintiff's servant objected to it delivered them to the purchaser. Held that K was liable for damages at the instance of the plaintiff in an action for conversion of the goods. AYUT DAS v KELLY

of moveables lying on land—Civil Procedure Code s. 43—Defendants having forcibly taken possession of plaintiff's land upon which was (1) standing timber and (2) logs of timber lying stored on the ground, plaintiff had in a prior suit recovered possession and damages. Subsequently to the institution of such prior suit defendants (1) cut and removed certain standing trees and (2) removed the logs which lay stored on the ground. Upon plaintiff bringing a second suit to recover damages on both grounds, objection was raised as to the logs that a claim for their value might have been included in the former suit since their conversion was effected when the plaintiff was dispossessed of the land upon which they lay and that under s. 43 no claim could now be made in respect of them. Held that a trespass on a piece of land is by itself no proof of any conversion of moveables lying upon the land at the time that the trespass takes place that notwithstanding plaintiff's eviction from the land possession of the timber lying stored upon it should be presumed to have continued in him in the absence of proof of any act on the part of the defendant with special reference to such timber and showing unequivocally that the plaintiff was entirely deprived of the use of them; and that conversion of the logs was not effected by the trespass, but only by their removal subsequently to the institution of the previous suit. MORI v AYUTBRAMAN

1—Hindu convert to Christianity—Law governing converts—Hindu law—Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity the Hindu law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert. He may renounce the old law by which he was bound, as he has renounced the old religion or if he thinks fit he may abide by the old law notwithstanding he has renounced the old religion. The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of Hindu law but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity has no concern such as his rights and interests in and his powers over property. The convert though not bound as to such matters either by the Hindu law or by any positive law may by his course of conduct after his conversion have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters. ABRAHAM v ABRAHAM

2—Law governing converts—Succession Act s 331—Native Christians are governed by the Succession Act but if a family of native Christians continued to observe the Hindu law of succession until the Succession Act altered their rule of succession the members of the family born before the Succession Act came into operation could not be deprived of the rights acquired by them under Hindu law. a Hindu marriage ceremony with S a Brahman girl of eight years of age in 1850. The marriage was never consummated nor was the consummation ceremony performed. In 1851 A K was converted to Christianity. S refused to live with him because he was an outcaste and in 1857 S renounced all claims on him or his estate. In 1859 A K went through a Christian form of marriage with M. In 1881 A K died intestate and possession was taken of his estate by the Administrator General. S claimed the estate from the Administrator General. Her suit was dismissed on the ground that A K having died an outcaste and degraded and his degradation not atoned for under Hindu law no right of inheritance remained to her. Before judgment was delivered S died and the suit abated. In a suit filed by the Administrator General to have the estate administered by the Court the claimants were (1) the father of A K (2) the brother of A K undivided from his father and (3) the executor of M. Held that S was the wife of A K when he went through the form of marriage with M and that but for the fact that S had relinquished her rights S would have been entitled on the death of A K to such portion of his estate as the law assigned to her as his widow. Held also that under s 35 of the Indian Succession Act 1865 the father of A K was entitled to the whole of the estate. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF MADRAS v ARANDA CHARI

5—Native Christians—Change of religion—Law applicable to converts—Succession—Inheritance—Where in consequence of the conversion of a person from one form of religion to another the question arises as to the law to be applied to such person that question is to be determined not by ascertaining the law which was applicable to such person prior to the conversion but by ascertaining the law or custom of the class to which such person attached himself after conversion and by which he preferred that his succession should be governed. 6—Hindus becoming Mahomedans—Succession of property—Held that the question as to succession of property between parties who though originally Hindus subsequently embraced the Mahomedan religion and professed that religion for successive generations must be disposed of under the Mahomedan law and the plea of usage opposed to Mahomedan law must not be recognized. 8—Converts from Hindu to Mahomedan religion—Custom as to inheritance—The general presumption arising from the intimate connection between law and religion in the Mahomedan faith is that the Mahomedan law governs converts from the Hindu religion to Mahomedanism. But a well established custom in the case of such converts to follow their old Hindu law of inheritance would override that general presumption and a usage establishing a special rule of inheritance as regards a special kind of property would be given the force of law even though it be at variance with both Hindu and Mahomedan laws *MAHOMED SIDICK v. 9—Suni Borah Mahomedans—Conversion Effect of—Hindu converts to Mahomedanism Custom and usage of—Inheritance among such converts—Native Christians—Law applied to Native Christians prior to Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—Burden of proof—The Suni Borah Mahomedan community of the Dhaudhuka Taluka in Gujarat are governed by the Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance. Held therefore that in this community a widow is entitled to succeed to her husband's estate to the exclusion of a daughter or a step daughter. As to the law governing Hindu converts to Mahomedanism the following principles may now be regarded as settled—(1) Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from Hinduism; but (2) a well established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption (3) This custom should be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance (4) If any particular custom of succession be alleged which is at variance with the general law applicable to these communities the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom. If evidence is given as to the general prevalence of Hindu rules of succession in a Mahomedan community in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law the burden of proof is discharged and it then rests with the party disputing the particular Hindu usage in question to show that it is excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community. Among Native Christians certain classes strictly retain the old Hindu usages others retain these usages in a modified form and others again wholly abandon them. Before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the Christian convert could elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes and he would be governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself Abraham v. Abraham & Alao I A 195 These same principles are applied to the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism such as Akoyas and Cutchi Memons BAI HAJI v. BAI SANTOK finding no evidence to show by whom complainant's arm had been broken treated the case as one of simple hurt and sentenced the accused accordingly Complainant then applied for compensation to the District Magistrate who instituted fresh proceedings and convicted the accused of grievous hurt Held that as the whole matter was one transaction and went as a whole before the Bench of Magistrates and as the facts were deposed to by the same witnesses before the Magistrate the two convictions could not stand side by side The proceedings before the Bench of Magistrates were accordingly quashed. IN THE Enquiry having been made the Magistrate committed the prisoner not only for wrongful confinement, but disbelieving the defence for fabrication of false evidence and for bringing a false charge. The prisoners were tried by the Sessions Judge and found guilty on all three charges at one and the same time. Held that the conviction on the last two charges was illegal as by adding the additional charges the Magistrate had really prejudged the defence to the first charge. Where the Court without having first heard the evidence for the prosecution examines the witnesses for the defence he commits an irregularity but if the prisoners are not materially prejudged thereby the conviction will not be set aside IN THE MATTER OF TURIBULLAH

1 Infringement of copyright—Ex dence—Where there is no original matter in the work the strongest evidence of servile imitation and piracy must be afforded before an action for an infringement of copyright can be successful. ROUS & CO v. THACKER & CO 1 Hyde 9

2 Annotated edition of an ancient religious work—Originality—Colourable imitation—Injunction—Damages—Account—Act XX of 1847 s 12—The plaintiff a bookseller in 1884 brought out a new and annotated edition of a certain well known Sanskrit work on religious observances entitled Vitraya having for that purpose obtained the assistance of Pandits who re-cast and re-arranged the work introduced various passages from other old Sanskrit works on the same subject and added foot notes. In 1885 the plaintiff registered the copyright of this work. In 1886 the defendants printed and published an edition of the same work the text of which was identical with that of the plaintiff's work which moreover contained the same additional passages and the same foot notes at the same places with many slight differences. Held that the plaintiff's work was such a new arrangement of old matter as to be an original work and entitled to protection and that as the defendants had not gone to independent sources for their material but had pirated the plaintiff's work they must be restrained by injunction. Held also that an account of the net profits made by the defendants by the sale of the plaintiff's book could be ordered notwithstanding the provisions of s 12 of Act XX of 1847 as the result of the account would be to give to the plaintiff what he could have claimed as damages under that section. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of the copyright in the said books and they sued in Bombay for a declaration of their ownership and that the said books printed and sold by the defendant were an infringement of the said copyright and for an injunction etc. It appeared that in June 1891 the plaintiffs' agent who was then in India, instructed the Bombay firm of S to order copies of the said translations from the defendant. 4. Translation—Cause of action—Stat 5 § 61 c 45—Act XX of 1847 § 8—Order for books sent from Bombay to Delhi—Registration of copyright—Notice of disputed proprietorship—The plaintiffs were publishers in London. The defendant carried on a printing and publishing business at Delhi. Between the years 1849 and 1861 the defendant translated certain English works (e.g. Tidhamter's Measurat in Barward Smith's Algebra etc.) into the Urdu language for the use of native students and sold and distributed copies of such translations in various parts of India. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of the copies of the said books and that they sent them to the defendant for sale on their ownership and that the said printed and sold by the defendant were an infringement of the said copyright and for an injunction etc. It appeared that in June 1861 the plaintiffs' agent who was then in India instructed the defendant to order copies of the said translations from the defendant. A letter was accordingly sent by S to the defendant at Delhi requesting him to send the books to Bombay by value payable post which the defendant did and he received payment for them from the post office at Delhi. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction and he denied that he had infringed the plaintiffs' copyright. Held that no part of the plaintiffs' cause of action arose in Bombay and that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction. The act of S in paying for and receiving the goods formed no part of the defendant's offence which was completed when he posted the books at Delhi. The English Copyright Act (Stat 5 & 6 Vic c 45) extends to all parts of India. Having regard to s 15 of that Act it is clear that a person who infringes copyright must be sued if he offends in India not only within the limits of that country but also in that part of India in which the offence has been committed. See also s 13 of the Indian Act XX of 1847. Held also that translations are not copies and that the defendant by translating the books had not infringed the plaintiffs' copyright. The plaintiffs had registered themselves as the proprietors of the copyright of the books in question both in London and in India. The defendant had not given notice of his intention to dispute the plaintiffs' copyright as required by s 8 of Act XX of 1847. Held that the plaintiffs' copyright in the book had been established. MACMILLAN & SHANMUG URAMA M ZAKA

5 Form of registration—Selection of poems Copyright in—Infringement of copyright by publication of copy before registration—Assignment of copyright previous to registration—Limitation of suits for infringement of copyright—Stat 5 & 6 Vic c 45—The plaintiffs the partners of a firm M & Co were the proprietors registered under 5 & 6 Vic c 45 of the copyright of a selection of songs and poems composed by numerous well known authors which was prepared by one P and originally published in 1861 since the original publication the book ran through several editions one of which was published in the year 1881. The book was registered under the provisions of the above statute on the 8th February 1889 the name of both the publisher and proprietor being entered in the register as M & Co the firm's address being given and the date of the first publication was entered as the 19th July 1861. The poems contained in the book were arranged by P not in chronological order of their production but in gradation of feeling and subject and at the end of the book were given some notes critical and explanatory. On the 15th January 1899 the defendant published at Calcutta a book containing the same selection of poems and songs as was contained in P's book. The arrangement however of the defendants' book differed from P's in that the poems of each author were placed together and in order of their composition. The poems the defendant printed solely in the work were contained in the work by the original author but which were omitted by

P and in another poem one line. In many places there were differences of reading in the two books and in more of punctuation. In the defendant's book some of the titles to the poems which had been assigned thereto by P and not by the original authors appeared as well as good many of P's notes some with acknowledgment and some without. With each poem the defendant gave a mass of notes critical and explanatory and he also prefixed to the poems of each author a biographical notice. The suit was instituted on the 27th February 1890 and the plaintiffs complained that the publication of defendant's book constituted a breach of their copyright and prayed for the usual relief by way of injunction and damages. They contended that although the copyright in the works of the original authors had long expired, they were entitled to the copyright in the selection made by P. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there could be no copyright in such a selection; that if any existed the defendant's book did not infringe it; that the plaintiffs' book being registered as first published in 1861 and the infringement charged being in respect of the edition of 1889 and there being no evidence to show that the same selection was contained in the latter as in the former edition the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief prayed for; that the author of the plaintiffs' book being P in whom the copyright would prima facie be and the property being registered as in the plaintiffs' firm the registry was bad as the assignment of the copyright to the plaintiffs was not shown; that the registration was also bad as the entry merely contained the name and address of the plaintiffs' firm and not the individual names and addresses of the partners of the firm; that the publication of the defendant's book having been before the date of registration the suit would not lie and that the suit was barred by the special limitation provided by s 28 of the Stat 5 & 6 Vic c 45. Held that such a selection could be the subject matter of copyright; the true principle applicable to such cases being that one person is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which another has been at for the purpose of producing his work or to take away the result of the other's labour or in other words his property. Held further that the defendant's book constituted a piracy of the plaintiffs' book and had infringed their copyright and that they were entitled to the relief they sought. Held also that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it was reasonable to assume that successive issues of a book of this kind and of the same name are substantially the same book; that it was unnecessary that the registry should show an assignment of the copyright by P to the plaintiffs; Held a v. Dicks L R 10 CA D 217 followed; that the registration was not bad by reason of the names and addresses of the partners of the firm not being given; Law v. Dicks L R 10 CA D 217 followed; that the title to copyright is complete before registration which is only a condition precedent to the right to sue and that the plaintiffs had not therefore lost their right of action by reason of the defendant's book being

These lands were subject to simple mortgages executed in 1873 upon which decrees were obtained in 1884 and had been sold in execution of these decrees in 1887. The co-sharer lumberdar having obtained a decree in a Court of revenue against the mortgagors under s 93 (g) of the N W P Rent Act (XII of 1881) for recovery of the arrears of revenue paid by him sought to execute that decree under s 177 of the Act by sale of the lands which had been sold in 1887 and thereupon the auction purchaser at that sale objected under s 178 and the objection having been overruled brought a suit as authorized by s 181 in a Civil Court to establish his title to the lands and to have them protected from sale in execution of the Court of Revenue decree. This suit was decreed and the decree not having been appealed against became final. Subsequently the co-sharer lumberdar brought a suit in the Civil Court in which he claimed a decree for enforcement of lien by sale of the land for the amount of the Court of Revenue decree and for a declaration that the said lien which is on account of Government be declared preferential to the mortgages of 1873 the decrees thereon of 1884 and the sales under those decrees of 1887. He claimed this lien not only in respect of the arrears of Government revenue paid but also in respect of future interest. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD J dissenting)—(1) That the Legislature had not given or recognized in the North Western Provinces any such right of charge or lien in favour of a person paying Government revenue as was claimed here or provided any means by which such a charge could be enforced and that any such charge would be at variance with the policy and intention of the Government as disclosed in its legislative enactments. (2) That no Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit and no Court of revenue had jurisdiction to make a decree for sale of the immovable property or a decree in execution of which the immovable property could be sold to the prejudice of incumbrances to which it* was subject. (3) That it was not the intention of the Legislature that a Civil Court should have jurisdiction to invest by declaration or otherwise a decree of a Court of revenue with the attributes of a decree for sale such as could be passed by a Civil Court in a suit for sale under the Transfer of Property Act 1882. (4) That there is no general principle of equity to the effect that whoever having an interest in an estate makes a payment in order to save the estate obtains a charge on the estate and therefore in the absence of a statutory enactment a co-sharer who paid the whole revenue and thus saved the estate does not by reason of such payment acquire a charge on the share of his defaulting co-sharer. Kanu Ram Das v Mozaffer Hosain Shale 1 L R 14 Cal 509 approved. (5) That the principle of Maritime Civil Salvage had no application to the case and that no analogy could exist between the case of a salvor in Maritime Civil Salvage and the case of a co-sharer in a mehal to whom s 146 or s 148 of the North Western Provinces Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) applied. Leslie v French 1 L R 23 Ch D 552 and Faleks v Scottish Imperial Insurance Company 1 L R 34 Ch D 81 referred to. SEEK CHITON MAL v SHIB LAL [1 L R, 14 All 273

Limitation Act

1877 arts 99 and 132—Suit to recover assessment paid by a co owner of property from other co owners—In 1868 the uncle of the plaintiff brought a suit (No 176 of 1868) against five members of the undivided family to which the defendants in the present suit belonged and obtained a money decree in execution of that decree he attached and sold certain land in which all the members of the defendants' family were interested At the sale he purchased the land himself and was put into possession In 1878 he began to pay the assessment upon the whole property Subsequent litigation took place between him and the defendants family pending which the plaintiff separated from his uncle and obtained the property in question as his share The result of that litigation was a decree by the High Court on the 23rd September 1879 declaring that the plaintiff's uncle was only entitled to the interest of the five members of the family who had been defendants in his suit (No 176 of 1868) in execution of the decree in which the property had been sold The plaintiff brought the present suit in 1883 against the other members of the family to recover their proportionate share of the assessment for the years 1875–1878 during which period he had paid the whole assessment He prayed for a sale of their interest in the land Both the lower Courts held that the payment of assessment did not create a charge on the property and that the plaintiff having omitted to sue within three years from the date of the payment made by him the present suit was barred On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court—Held confirming the lower Court a decree that the suit was barred. The plaintiff paid the assessment as full owner of the property and it was entirely by his own action that the defendants had been excluded from the property and did not pay their quotas of the assessment Under those circumstances the payments could be regarded as salvage payments so as to make them a charge according to equity justice and good conscience upon the shares of the other co-owners. ACHUT RAMCHANDRA IAL HARI KANTI I. Joint ownership

Use of joint property as between co-owners—*Right amongst themselves of co-sharers of joint property where there is a profitable use by one of them without others being excluded—Ferry worked by one of the co owners of land—Property does not cease to be joint merely because it is used so as to produce more profit to one of the joint owners who has incurred expenditure for that purpose than to the others where the latter are not excluded Joint property being used consistently with the continuance of the joint ownership and possession without exclusion of the co sharers who do not join in the work there is no encroachment on the rights of any of them as regards common enjoyment so as to give ground for a suit The defendant a co sharer in village lands without claiming to restrain competition acted upon the right that a ferry may be established in India by a person on his own property taking toll from strangers and that he may acquire such a right by grant or user over the property of others whether a co sharer with them or not He used property that he owned jointly with the plaintiffs his co-sharers excluding none of them As no grant was ever made to him he could only have acted upon an exclusive right by showing that he had either dispossessed them or had had adverse possession for twelve years or that he had used the ferry for twelve years as of right The question however of any exclusive right in the defendant had not arisen For the parties being co owners the defendant could make use of the joint property in a way quite consistent with the continuance of the joint ownership and joint possession. Watson & Co v Ramchand Dutt I L R 18 Calc 10 I L R 17 I A 110 distinguished in regard to the exclusion of co sharers which there took place and referred to as to partition to be exercised by Courts in interfering with the enjoyment of joint estates as between their co owners. *LAOHMESWAR SINGH & MANOWAR POSSAIN

The other co-sharer remained entitled to claim that this possession was held partly for him. The present suit was brought upon two agreements purporting to have been made in 1870 between the two co-sharers while proceedings to obtain the above decrees were pending to the effect that whereas both had claims against the talukhdar, one only was to sue him the other paying half of what might be decreed. The Judicial Committee upon the evidence concluded that the Appellate Court attributing too much to certain omissions and acts on the plaintiff's part which were more or less explained had erred in reversing the decree of the first Court which maintained the agreements depriving the plaintiff of his costs in that Court only MUHAMMAD YUSUF v MUHAMMAD HUSAIN

(a) CULTIVATION

27 ———— Altering property without consent of co-sharers—Growing indigo—Several persons jointly held lands which were not divided by metes and bounds but in specified shares. One of the sharers leased out his share or interest in the lands. The lessee sowed indigo on the joint lands. The other sharers brought a suit to restrain the lessee of their co-sharer from growing indigo on the land. It is held that a co-sharer cannot use the joint lands so as to alter the condition of the property as regards the other sharers' interests without their consent. That indigo as a crop being valueless for joint use is tantamount to the lessee must be restrained from growing it with out the consent of all the proprietors. (1) OPINION OF BHEENDESI SINGH

29 ———— Cultivation of indigo by one co-sharer without consent of others—Injunction as between co-sharers—Practice of the English Courts in granting injunctions—Applicability of—W while in possession of an entire mouzah as waradar had under an arrangement with the proprietors built factories and cultivated indigo by reclaiming a quantity of waste land. On the expiration of his lease W who still held a portion of the mouzah in rywa from a 2 anna co-sharer continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before and disregarding the opposition of the 14-anna co-sharers claimed an exclusive title to do so. The 14-anna co-sharers thereupon brought a suit against W for rywala possession of the khas lands and prayed among other things for an injunction prohibiting the defendant from sowing indigo upon the rywala lands without the plaintiffs' consent and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendant from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs holding rywala possession of the lands. The Court below granted an injunction prohibiting the defendant from growing indigo on the khas lands without the consent of the plaintiffs. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction but having regard to the circumstances under which the defendant cultivated the lands it was necessary to vary the injunction granted by the Court below by making it an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of the rywala possession of the lands. I AM CHAND DUTT v WATSON & CO [I L R 15 Calc 914]

But held on appeal to the Privy Council (reversing the above decision) that the restraint being made by the co-sharer in occupation simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable use of the land in good husbandry and not in denial of the other's title such restraint was no ground for proceedings on the part of the other to obtain a decree for joint possession or for damages; nor would grant an injunction be the proper remedy. As the Courts in Bengal in cases where no specific rule exists are to act according to justice equity and good conscience on its being found that where land was held in common between the parties one of them was in the act of cultivating a part of the land which was not actually used by the other it would not have been consistent with this rule to restrain the farmer from proceeding with his proper cultivation; but in a case of competition at a proper rate in respect of the exclusive use by an individual of the one who should be preferred in such case was carrying on cultivation of the

In the year 1874, A leased his share to the defendant for a term ending in October 1880 for the purpose of growing indigo. At the same time B leased his share to the defendant for the same purpose for a term ending in October 1881. A and B sold their shares to the plaintiff in the year 1879. In January 1881 plaintiff sued to prevent the defendant from growing indigo on the land and for khas possession on the ground that the lease of A's share having expired the defendant was not entitled to retain the land for the purpose of growing indigo under the lease given by B. Held that the plaintiff having by his own act become the owner of both shares he could not as owner of one share exercise a right which he was precluded from exercising as owner of the other share and that the suit should have been dismissed. HOLLOWAY v MUDDUN MORUN LALL

Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), s. 52—One of several co sharers in a mahal having begun to erect certain kachcha buildings upon the common land another co sharer three or four days after the building had commenced brought a suit for an injunction to restrain the continuance thereof on the ground that the defendant was ousting the plaintiff as a co-sharer from a portion of the common land. It was found that the defendant was building upon land which was in excess of the share which would come to him on partition and that on partition the plaintiff could not be adequately compensated. Held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding further with the building and directing that the building so far as it had proceeded be pulled down and prohibiting the defendant from building on the land as exclusive owner at any future time. Paras Ram v Shergil I L R 3 All 661 referred to. Per STRAIGHT J that it was for the defendant appellant to show that the lower Appellate Court had exercised a wrong discretion in granting the injunction and that this not having been shown the High Court ought not to interfere. SHADI v ANUP SINGH I L R. 12 All 436

made parties or not. But if the land demised ceases to be ijmal and different portions of it become the property of different owners any one of the owners may sue for so much of the rent as he considers himself entitled to making the other owners parties to the suit. Where co-sharers of ijmal land let to a tenant at an entire rent brought a suit against their tenant to recover their proportionate shares of the rent and made the other co-sharers defendants avowedly for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication of their title as between themselves and the defendants other than the tenant—Held that as the area of the property had not been divided as the rent had always been paid in its entirety and as the title of all the co-sharers remained ijmal the suit would not lie. ANANDA CHURN POY v. KALLY COOMAR POY 11 L. R. 4 Cal. 89 2 C. L. R. 484.

141. — Suit for arrears of rent by undivided co-sharer against co-sharer.—An undivided co-sharer cannot maintain a suit for arrears of rent against an occupant of the estate without evidence that the rents due to such co-sharer have been separately collected or that there was an agreement to pay them separately. Still less can such a suit be maintained where the defendant is himself a co-sharer. DIBOONDROO CHOWDHRY v. DIMONATH MOOKERJEE 19 W. R. 168.

142. — Extent of shares admitted.—In a mehal where by custom each co-sharer collects his proportionate share of rent from the common tenants—Held that the several co-sharers can where the extent of their shares is admitted by the tenants sue to recover their respective shares of rent. HIDAYETOULLAH v. one or more of his co-sharers he may be sued for the rent by the person or persons with whom he engaged. Where a co-sharer occupies more than his own share or holds the whole estate by renting the land he occupies from one or more of his co-sharers the liability of the cultivating shareholder to payment must in the absence of usage agreement or evidence be deemed single and entire. But if there is an agreement express or implied that the occupying shareholder shall pay separately to each of his co-proprietors a definite sum such sum may be recovered by each co-proprietor by a separate rent suit. KALSH PERSHAD v. [12 W. R. 418]

146. — Collusion of other sharers with tenant.—One of three co-sharers of certain property the rent of which was paid by the tenant to a person acting as agent of the co-sharers from whom they received it in proportion to their respective shares brought a suit against the tenant for her share of the rent of which she alleged her co-sharers were colluding with the tenant to deprive her. To this suit she made her co-sharers defendants. The defendants alleged that she had not received and was not entitled to receive the rent from the tenant but the lower Courts found these facts in her favour and gave her a decree. It was objected on special appeal that the suit would not lie inasmuch as the plaintiff being one of several co-sharers was not competent to sue alone for her share of the rent. Held that under the circumstances and the co-sharers having been made defendants the suit was maintainable. DOORGA CHURN SURMA v. 157—Arrangement for separate payment of rents—Evidence of arrangement—Parties—Suits for arrears of rent—Suit for kabulat—Cancellation of lease—Where it has been arranged between the co-sharers of an estate and their tenant that he shall pay each co-sharer his proportionate share of the entire rent each co-sharer may bring a separate suit against the tenant for such proportionate share. In the absence of such an arrangement no such suit can be maintained. Such an arrangement may be evidenced either by direct proof or by usage from which its existence may be presumed and is perfectly consistent with the continuance of the original lease of the entire tenure. But an arrangement of this nature will not enable one co-sharer to sue the tenant for a kabulat for a co-sharer who obtains a kabulat is bound at the request of the tenant to give him a potlak upon the same terms and the grant and acceptance of a finding lease of any separate share cannot exist contemporaneously with an original lease of the entire tenure. 163—Suit by co-sharers making another defendant without asking him to join as plaintiff—Two of four persons who were jointly entitled to rent of a taluk purchased the taluk. One of the two other co-sharers thereupon sued the purchasers for the balance of rent after deducting the amount to which the purchasers were entitled as zamindars and he made the fourth co-sharer a defendant without having asked him to join as a plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit as improperly framed. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to ask the first co-sharer to join as plaintiff and that the suit was properly framed. TARIN KANT LAHRI v. he had applied the rent due under the pottah towards the liquidation of debts due under bonds in P's name but for which the joint family were liable The first Court dismissed the suit on the preliminary issue that it was in substance a suit for a specific share of the rent by some only of the co sharers and that there being no agreement by the tenant to pay the co sharers their respective shares of the rent separately such a suit would not lie Held (upholding the order of the lower Appellate Court) that the order of the first Court was wrong The suit as framed, was necessarily a suit in the alternative and as the plaintiffs were necessarily not aware whether any portion of P's share of the rent was due or not but believing that none was due they could only claim their share asking to have the plaintiff amended so as to include the whole rent due if it should appear that anything was due to P and thus bring the suit within the rule that in the absence of special agreement between a tenant and co sharers to pay their rateable proportion of the rent a suit by one of the co sharers must be for the entire rent due making his co sharers defendants if they refuse to join as plaintiffs The prayer of the plaintiff fully provided for this and the suit should have been tried on its merits and the plaintiff amended if the facts proved showed that any rent remained unpaid and due to P as asked for by the plaintiffs PERCASH LAL & AKHROWAL BAKSHIBHAI ROY [I L R. 19 Cal. 735]

The defendant objected after that the plaintiff being a part proprietor was not entitled to sue for enhanced rent. The first Court gave a decree at an enhanced rate. On appeal the subordinate Judge dismissed the whole suit on the ground that the suit being one for enhanced rent and the plaintiff a part proprietor the suit did not lie. Held that the kabalat having been executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed the present case did not come within the operation of that Act and the plaintiff although a part proprietor could bring this suit. Rem C under Chakrabarty v Girdhar Dutt I L R 19 Cal 755 followed. Tanayya Narayan Singh v Narayan Singh I L R 23 Cal 658

The terms of the defendant's pottah were that the whole of the lands being brought under cultivation the landlords would be at liberty to measure the lands of the gants and if the land be found greater in quantity than 100 bighas the tenant would pay rent at the rate of 10 annas per bigha. The lands being found greater than the said quantity the plaintiff prayed for a decree for rent at that rate for the whole area. The defendant pleaded inter alia that the plaintiff as a fractional sharer in the landlord's interest could not sue him alone. Held that the plaintiff having sued for the whole rent and made all the non-joining co-sharers parties defendants there was no defect in the suit. Bisnu Dasia Dasi v Pannu Mohan Bera I L R 20 Cal 107 Tegendra Narayan Singh v Bakas Singh I L R 23 Cal 658 referred to. DINAKAR DASI v BHOPENDRA 3 C W N 225

A ten anna share was allotted to one (the present plaintiff) a four anna share to another and a two-anna share to a third. The talukhdars continued to hold the entire property and paid the rent apportioned by law severally to each of the parties entitled. In 1861 the owner of the two anna share obtained a decree against the talukhdars for enhancement of the rent of his share. In the present suit against the same talukhdars the defendants contended that the rent of their talukh had not been changed for a period of more than twenty years before suit. Held that the decree in the suit of 1861 had the effect of enhancing the rent payable for the whole talukh; that the plaintiff could avail herself of that decree although she was not a party to it.* SARAT SODDARY DASIA v AKAND MONDA SUNDIA GRETACK

In 1886 K S mortgaged his undivided share to S C in consideration of a loan advanced by S C to him. In 1897 K S brought a suit to which S C was not made a party against K B for partition and on 27th April 1898 obtained a decree under which a commission of partition was issued. In the course of the suit both K S and K B died—K B on 2nd September 1899 and K S on 30th March 1902—and by orders of Court their sons were put on the record in place of their respective fathers. The return to the commission of partition was made on 24th February 1903 and on 20th July 1903 and order was made confirming the return and under s 222 of the Civil Procedure Code charging the costs of the suit and of the commission of partition to the shares of the plaintiffs and defendants respectively in the suit. Meanwhile in July 1899 S C brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree dated 5th August 1899 for an account and sale and in that suit a final order for sale was made on 6th January 1891 which however was only filed on 19th August 1893. mortgagee having had the benefit of the partition, and having accepted and approved of it as part of his title as shown by the proceedings for sale was though not a party to the partition suit bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition. The defendants in the partition suit however not being parties to the mortgage suit such an order could not be properly made at their instance but they should enforce the charge for costs against the mortgagee by supplemental suit and the Court stayed the sale of the property for a reasonable time to give the parties an opportunity of moving for stay of the sale in any such suit as might be instituted. 89 — Suit on bath chitta—Some partners denying debt others admitting debt—In a suit brought against several partners to recover a sum of money on a bath chitta some of the partners denied the debt and the partnership whilst others admitted both the partnership and the liability. The Court found in favour of the plaintiffs and gave them a decree for the amount sued for with costs and ordered the defendants who had disputed the debt and the fact of the partnership to pay the costs of the other defendants who had admitted their liability. 90 — Payment into Court—Money paid into Court at settlement of issues—At the settlement of issues defendant paid money into Court which plaintiff took out in part satisfaction of his claim and raised an issue as to damages. The plaintiffs subsequently accepted the sum paid in full satisfaction and withdrew the suit. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to his costs up to and including those of the settlement of issues. ARDEER JIMJI & HORABJI PESTANJI

92. — Civil Procedure Code (1832) s 379—Suit for injunction or damages—Payment into Court by defendant to satisfy plaintiff's claim—Costs in such case—Costs—Civil Procedure Code (1832) s 220—Discretion of Court—The plaintiffs sued alleging certain windows in their house to be ancient windows and complaining that a building in course of erection by the defendant would when completed according to the building plan obstruct the light through the said windows. In his written statement the defendant denied that the plaintiffs windows were ancient and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the light and air as an easement. At the time of filing his written statement the defendant paid into Court the sum of Rs 200 which in his written statement he stated was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiffs for any damages they might sustain and which he (defendant) paid in without prejudice to his contentions but for the sake of peace and to avoid litigation. At the hearing the plaintiffs abandoned their claim for an injunction but insisted that they were entitled to more than Rs 200 as damages. The Court found that the plaintiffs windows were ancient but that the Rs 200 paid into Court were sufficient damages. It therefore ordered that the defendant should pay all the plaintiffs costs up to the date at which the Rs 200 were paid into Court and as to their subsequent costs that the defendant should pay three fourths of the plaintiffs subsequent costs and the plaintiffs should pay the defendant one-fourth of the defendant's subsequent costs. The Court offered to simplify its order by directing the defendant to pay all the costs of the plaintiffs up to the date of paying the Rs 200 into Court and half the plaintiffs' taxed costs subsequent to that date. The defendant appealed contending that under s 373 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XII of 1859) the plaintiffs should have been ordered to pay all the defendant's costs subsequent to the payment into Court. Held that this suit was not one to recover a debt or damages and therefore s 373 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply. That being so the Judge had full discretion under s 220 of the Civil Procedure Code to apportion the costs and the Court of Appeal would not interfere with that discretion. Held also that in cases not being suits to recover a debt or damages where money is paid into Court the principle and ruling of s 373 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to regulate the discretion of the Court in directing the payment of costs. out the judgment debt is paid into Court the amount decreed. Subsequently the decree holder (A) and his cousin (M) put in a petition intimating that the money belonged to them in equal shares and the Court afterwards held a proceeding in the presence of the rival that no steps had been taken by his client to take out the money and that the name of M had been registered with that of A as decree holders and the money was available for payment on their joint application. Eventually M sued A for a moiety of the amount. The members of the Appeal Bench however differed in opinion as regards the question of costs. PETHURAM C J being of opinion that the costs of the appeal should be treated in the same way as the rest of the costs in the case and be divided between the parties to the partition and NORRIS J holding that the respondent having failed on appeal ought to pay the costs and on this question an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent cl 15. Held by PRINSEP and TATEYAN JJ—The costs of the appeals were severable from the general costs of the suit and therefore though the suit was one for partition the principle that the unsuccessful party must pay the costs was applicable so far as the appeals were concerned the respondent therefore should pay all the costs in the two appeals. At the time of its institution Act XV of 1882 was applicable by s 22 of which Act a plaintiff was deprived in a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court of his costs if he obtained a decree for less than Rs 2000 unless the Judge who tried it certified it was a fit case to be tried in the High Court. The suit was not determined until after the passing of Act I of 1895 by s 11 of which the deprivation of costs applied to cases in which the plaintiff obtained a decree for less than Rs 1000. The Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff and without certifying that the case was fit to be brought in the High Court he allowed the plaintiff the costs of the suit. Held on appeal that the case was governed by s 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868). The defendants in the suit were the plaintiff's mother Nanbal who was the widow and executrix of Parshotam Ramji, and one Burjori, who had been appointed by Nanbal to act for her during her absence on pilgrimage. The plaintiff alleged that Nanbal was insane and unfit to manage the estate and that Burjori was mismanaging and wasting it. A receiver was appointed shortly after the filing of the suit. At the hearing the suit was dismissed as against Burjori, and the Court ordered that his costs should be paid by the plaintiff's next friend, being of opinion that he was the real actor in the suit and that it would be unfair to make the plaintiff's estate bear the costs of proceedings in which she had no real voice. The Court was further of opinion that at the time the suit was filed Nanbal was not of unsound mind but that she had subsequently become insane. The usual accounts were ordered to be taken as against Nanbal. The result of taking these accounts was that her administration of the estate as executrix was found to be unimpeachable and in December 1883 the Court made an order directing that the next friend should pay the costs of the infant plaintiff. The next friend became insolvent and his solicitors (the respondents) obtained an order from the Judge in chambers that the receiver should pay their costs out of the estate in his hands. The plaintiff appealed. The respondents contended that the plaintiff had adopted the suit and that they had a lien for their costs—at any rate so far as they were incurred for the recovery and preservation of the estate. Held that the respondents were not entitled to be paid out of the estate. The plaintiff had done no overt act in suing her adoption of the suit and the fact that she remained passive was consistent with her disapproval of it as the decrees did not immediately affect her or require her to take action until the death of her mother Nanbal. Held also that the property in the hands of the receiver could not be held to have been recovered by means of the suit as it appeared that the investments were of a perfectly legitimate nature so that there was no cause for alarm with respect to the safety of the property and that the suit so far as it was based on alleged danger to the estate was quite unavailing. It was argued for the respondents that the appointment of a receiver preserved the estate from future risk arising from the fact that the executrix Nanbal was of unsound mind. Act II of 1874, s. 18 and s. 35—Costs of claims to property in possession of Administrator General under order of Court—Costs of Administrator General in a suit to recover such property how paid—Expenses of taking care of such property incurred by Administrator General—The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 were the daughters of one S who died in Bombay on the 9th November 1855. Shortly after the death of S the plaintiff went to Delhi leaving certain ornaments and other valuables belonging to her locked up in a box which also contained certain property which had belonged to her mother S. The box remained in the house in which the plaintiff had resided with S. The key of the box was taken by the plaintiff to Delhi. During the plaintiff's absence one of her sisters (defendant No. 3) presented a petition to the High Court alleging that all the property in the said box belonged to her deceased mother S and was in danger of being misappropriated by the plaintiff. Upon these allegations the Court, on the 16th January 1856 made an order under s. 18 of Act II of 1874, directing the Administrator General to take possession of the property of S and hold the same subject to the further order of the Court. Pursuant to this order the Administrator General took possession of the box and all its contents. The plaintiff admitting that some of the ornaments in the box had belonged to the estate of S sued to recover the remainder of the ornaments therein which she alleged belonged to herself and which she specified in a separate list. Defendant No. 3 denied her claim and contended that all the property belonged to the estate of S. The other sisters of the plaintiff (defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5) admitted the plaintiff's claim. The Court held that the plaintiff had proved her claim and directed that her property should be delivered over to her by the Administrator General. Held as to costs that the Administrator General was in the position of an interpleading plaintiff and that he was entitled in the first instance to recover his costs from the losing claimant (defendant No. 3). Failing recovery from defendant No. 3 he was entitled to be paid his costs out of the estate of S and if and in so far as that estate proved insufficient he was entitled to recover them out of the property which was the subject matter of the suit. Held also that the costs of the Administrator General included the expenses incurred by him in taking care of the property entrusted to him by the order of the Court such expenses to be apportioned according to the amounts respectively belonging to the estate of S and to the plaintiff and to be paid accordingly out of the said estate and out of the property of the plaintiff. *AMIR JAY R. trustees—Right of dissenting trustee to have bill

taxed even after payment—Jurisdiction of High Court—In a suit relating to a charitable trust the decree directed that the costs of all parties thereto when taxed should be paid out of the trust fund. Certain bills for costs were subsequently furnished to the trustees by the attorneys. Two of the trustees thought the bills reasonable and agreed that they should be paid. The third trustee objected to the amount of the bills as exorbitant, and desired that they should be taxed. Notwithstanding his protest however the other trustees paid the bills without taxation. He thereupon took out a summons calling upon his co-trustees and the attorney to show cause why the bills should not be taxed and why they should not refund any sum which had been overpaid. Held that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed although they had been paid and that the High Court had jurisdiction to order taxation to be made. JINIBHOY MURCHERJI JINIBHOY v. 176 ——— Suit relating to charitable institution or endowment—Defendants costs as between attorney and client ordered out of the charity estate—Charges allowed and disallowed as against estate—Discretion of taxing master—Trustees—In a suit brought by the Advocate General at the instance of relatives for the purpose of removing the defendants from the position of directors of a Mahomedan mosque and for administration of the property of the mosque etc. the decree ordered that the defendants should have their costs taxed as between attorney and client out of the charity funds. The attorneys of the defendants accordingly brought in their bill of costs and in taxation it was contended that they should be allowed out of the charity funds all the sums which the taxing master certified they should pay their attorneys. Held that where the taxing master decided that certain items allowed against the defendants should not come out of the charity funds his decision could not be disturbed. It does not follow that because a charge is proper to be allowed between an attorney and client that the client if a trustee should be allowed that charge out of the trust funds. ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. 177 ——— Costs of two Counsel—Discretion of taxing officer—Insolvency proceedings—Allegation of improper conduct—Purchaser—Practice—A rule was obtained in certain insolvency proceedings against the purchaser of property of the insolvent to show cause why such purchase should not be set aside and alleging improper conduct on the part of the purchaser who was represented by two counsel at the hearing of the rule. On taxation of costs of the purchaser the other parties objected to the costs of two counsel on behalf of the purchaser being allowed. Held that having regard to the allegations made the taxing officer exercised a right discretion in allowing the costs of two counsel. IN THE MATTER OF BEER NURSING DUIT

taxed even after payment—Jurisdiction of High Court—In a suit relating to a charitable trust the decree directed that the costs of all parties thereto when taxed should be paid out of the trust fund. Certain bills of costs were subsequently furnished to the trustees by the attorneys. Two of the trustees thought the bills reasonable and agreed that they should be paid. The third trustee objected to the amount of the bills as exorbitant, and desired that they should be taxed. Notwithstanding his protest however the other trustees paid the bills without taxation. He thereupon took out a summons calling upon his co-trustees and the attorney to show cause why the bills should not be taxed and why they should not refund any sums which had been overpaid. Held that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed although they had been paid and that the High Court had jurisdiction to order taxation to be made. JINIBHOY MURCHURJI JINIBHOY v. The attorneys of the defendants accordingly brought in their bill of costs and in taxation it was contended that they should be allowed out of the charity funds all the sums which the taxing master certified they should pay their attorneys. Held that where the taxing master decided that certain items allowed against the defendants should not come out of the charity funds his decision could not be disturbed. It does not follow that because a charge is proper to be allowed between an attorney and client that the client if a trustee should be allowed that charge out of the trust funds. ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. The effect of a decree of the Court to set aside a settlement is to make every case tried by the Court of Session a case falling within the provisions of s 60—that is to say the Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of counsel retained by a private individual and in so doing does not deprive himself of the management of the case. Held that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed although he had been paid and that the High Court had jurisdiction to tax the bills. Compromises—Authority—Notice

Ex parte statement of counsel not made on oath if objected to—Per MACLEAY C.J. and MACPHERSON and HILL J.J., on appeal from STANLEY J.—Counsel procures a general authority an apparent authority which must be taken to continue until notice be given to the other side by the client that it has been determined to settle and compromise the suit in which he is actually retained as counsel. Where the compromise however extends to collateral matters to matters quite outside the scope of the particular case in which counsel is engaged in order to bind his client it must be shown that he had given his client special authority to compromise upon the terms upon which the compromise was effected, and the other side cannot avail themselves of the position that they did not know that it had not been given. They are not entitled to assume as in the case of an apparent authority that it was given and was existing. Where counsel under a misapprehension of his client's instructions and believing himself to have authority acts in fact without it he cannot bind his client. HUNDO LAL BOSE v. NISTARINI DASSI

the hands of the Collector as manager of the Court of Wards on the allegations that she had placed the property in the hands of the Court some years previously because she was not at that time in a position to manage it herself but that she was now capable of managing it, and desired to get it back. The suit was dismissed and the plaintiff appealed on the ground inter alia that inasmuch as she was not a disqualified proprietor "within the meaning of Act XIX of 1873 (North West Provinces Land Revenue Act) the Court of Wards had no jurisdiction to take the property and that its possession was merely the result of an arrangement to which she was a consenting party and which she now desired to terminate. Held that with reference to the provisions of Act XIX of 1873 and Act VIII of 1879 (North West Provinces Land Revenue Acts) the suit as brought was not maintainable inasmuch as there was no evidence that the plaintiff had obtained the previous sanction of the local Government to the release of the property from the superintendence of the Court of Wards as required by s. 20 of the latter Act. Held also that the plaintiff could not be allowed in appeal entirely to change the nature of the grounds upon which she alleged herself to be entitled to claim relief and that hence she could not now raise the plea that the Court of Wards in taking the property under its management had acted without jurisdiction. The expression "local Government" in ss. 194 and 195 of Act XIX of 1873 and s. 20 of Act VIII of 1879 means the Lieutenant Governor of the North Western Provinces. MASTRA BIR v. If a judgment creditor of I failed to execute his decree against the estate of I from that suit to have it declared that I was to have inherited all B's property and that if I was entitled to have that property attached to the satisfaction of his decree. The suit was adjourned. Held that the

Judge had no power to make any such order as that of the 28th March 1872 in regard to the Court of Wards. What he had power to do under Act XL of 1858 s. 12 was to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, and it would then have become the duty of the Collector to appoint a manager and a guardian in the same manner etc. as if the minor's property and person were subject to the Court of Wards. Held that the minor's interests were not properly represented before the Subordinate Judge whose decree therefore could not stand so as to affect the minor and that the minor must be made a party strictly in the manner prescribed by Bengal Act IV of 1870, s. 69. ABDOOL HIR v. s. 20 and ss. 51-55—Suit—Application for execution by Collector on behalf of ward when manager of his estate has been appointed—The word suit as used in ss. 51 to 55 of Bengal Act IX of 1879 is not limited to what is usually called a regular suit, but covers miscellaneous proceedings in a suit, such as an application for execution of a decree in which the ward for the first time seeks to have the carriage of litigation instituted by his predecessor in title. When it appeared that a manager of a minor's property had been appointed by the Court of Wards under the provisions of s. 20 of Bengal Act IX of 1879 and during the absence of such manager on leave an application was made on behalf of the minor by the Collector of the district for execution of a decree—Held that the office of manager did not become vacant because the manager claimed leave and that it was not vacant s. 61 of the Act did not enable the Collector to appear on behalf of the minor. BROOFTENDRO NARAIN DUTT v. 3 — and s. 7, cl. 8—Value—Said to set aside attachment on land.—The meaning of cl. 8 of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870 is that a person suing to set aside an attachment on land shall in no case be called upon to pay a higher fee than he would have to pay if he were suing for possession of the land accordingly in a suit for setting aside a summary attachment under Bombay Act I of 1886 placed by the Collector on land held on a settlement for a period not exceeding thirty years the value was held to be five times the assessment and the stamp duty calculated upon it irrespective of the actual market value or the amount for which the land was attached.

5 — and s. 12—Finality of taxing officer's decision as to Court fees—Finality—Meaning of—Duty of Court Fees Act officer.—The word final in s. 6 of the Court Fees Act has the same meaning as in s. 12 though it is applied to a different subject. The cases in which it has been held that notwithstanding the use of this word in s. 12 an appeal lies from a decision as to the category in which the relief sought by a plaintiff or appellant falls do not mean that decisions which the action declares to be final are nevertheless appealable but that the question of category is not a question relating to valuation and therefore is not declared by the section to be final. In both s. 5 and s. 12 final is used in its ordinary legal sense of unappealable. A decision under s. 5 of the Act is not open to appeal, revision or review and is final for all purposes and no means have been provided or suggested by the Legislature for questioning it. The officer mentioned in s. 6 of the Court Fees Act is not bound to advise parties as to the stamp required under the Act or to give them notice that they have not sufficiently stamped documents which the Act requires to be stamped before presentation.

They valued the relief sought at Rs 100. The value of the buildings of which they sought demolition was Rs 3000. B sued A claiming set aside of possession of certain land and to have certain buildings erected thereon by the defendant demolished. Held by STRAIGHT BRODURST and TRELL JJ with reference to the first suit, that it was one for a declaratory decree in which consequential relief was prayed, and fell under s. 7 art. 4, cl. 3 ——— Declaratory decree—Consequential relief—Court fees—In a suit for a de-which the removal of an attachment of such house in the execution of a decree was sought the plaintiff did not, as s. 7 of the Court Fees Act directs state in his plaint the amount at which he valued the relief sought nor did the Court of first instance cause him to supply this defect. On appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing his suit the lower Appellate Court demanded from the plaintiff Court fees in respect of his plaint and memorandum of appeal computed on the market value of such house the plaintiff having only paid in respect of those documents respectively the Court fees payable in a suit for a declaration of right where no consequential relief is prayed. Held that the market value of the property could not be taken by the lower Appellate Court to be the value of the relief sought as the plaintiff did not seek possession of the property and that as the valuation of the relief sought rested with the plaintiff and not the Court and as in this instance the declaration of right claimed necessarily carried with it the consequential relief sought of which the value was merely nominal further Court fees could

CHATURBHU SINGH I. L. R. 30 All. 362

5. — *Order requiring additional Court fee on claim passed subsequent to decree—Decree prepared so as to give effect to subsequent order—Civil Procedure Code ss 54 56 584—Court Fees Act ss 12 and 28—A Judge after disposing of an appeal on the 1st March 1883 again took it up and on the 21st March 1883 directed the appellant to pay additional Court-fees on her memorandum of appeal. On the 2nd May 1883 the appellant paid the additional Court-fees under protest and a decree was then prepared bearing date the 1st March 1883 but it referred to and carried into effect the subsequent order of the 21st March and the 2nd May. Per MAHMOOD J. that as soon as the Judge had passed the decree of the 1st March 1883 he ceased to have any power over it and was not competent to introduce new matters not dealt with by the judgment; that the order of the 21st March and the deposit of the 2nd May whether right or wrong were not proceedings to which effect could be given in the antecedent decree of the 1st March 1883; and that the decree was ultra vires to that extent and was therefore liable to correction in second appeal under s. 584 of the Civil Procedure Code. The powers conferred by ss 54 (a) and (c) and 55 read with s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code or by s. 11 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) read with cl. (ii) of s. 10 are intended to be exercised before the disposal of the case and not after it has been decided finally so far as the Court is concerned.*

COURT FEES ACT (VII OF 1870)

The powers conferred by s. 28 of the Court Fees Act cannot be exercised by an order passed after the decision of the case to which the question of the payment of Court fees relates and even assuming that they can be so exercised, such an order though it may be subject to such rules as to appeal or revision as the law may provide cannot be given effect to by making insertions in an antecedent decree. Per OLDFIELD J.—That the Court had power to make the order it did inasmuch as the collection of Court fees was no part of a Judge's functions in the trial of a suit which could be said to have ceased with its determination; and the provisions of the Court Fees Act fixed no time within which the presiding Judge could exercise his power of ordering documents to be stamped and seemed on the other hand to contemplate the exercise of that power at any time subsequent to the receipt filing or use of a document and to make the validity of the document and the proceedings relative thereto dependent on the document being properly stamped. MAHADEVI RAM KISHOR DAS I. ANANT VIRUPKSHA

2. — Execution of part of decree—Payment of full amount of Court fees not necessary for such part execution—Construction of Act—Court Fees Act s. 17—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a house and for mesne profits. In the same suit he also claimed certain account books and documents from the defendant. In paying Court fees he estimated the mesne profits at Rs 151 and paid on that amount. He obtained a decree and the amount of mesne profits awarded to him was Rs 349 13 3. The decree further directed that possession of the house should be given to him and that the books and documents should be handed over to him. He now applied for execution of that part of the decree which directed the delivery of the house and of the account books and other documents. The defendant contended that under s. 11 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) the plaintiff was not entitled to execution of any part of the decree until he paid the proper Court fees on the sum awarded as mesne profits viz. Rs 349 13 3. Held that the plaintiff might obtain execution of that part of the decree which ordered delivery of the house and books and documents without paying the fees payable on the amount awarded for mesne profits. S. 11 and s. 17 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) ought to be similarly construed and the language of the latter section which deals with multifarious suits shows that for the purposes of the stamp revenue such suits are deemed to be a collection of distinct suits relating to the several causes of action combined in them. In applying s. 11 to such suits in and s 28—Finality of decision of Court on question of Court fee—The decision of the Court on a question of the Court fee payable on a plaint or memorandum of appeal which is to be final as between the parties to the suit must be a decision made between the parties on the record and after they had an opportunity of being heard and not a mere decision based upon the report of a Munsarim before the plaint or memorandum of appeal filed and therefore before any parties are before the Court. Hence where a Court of first instance held on the report of the Munsarim that a plaint presented to it had been insufficiently stamped but subsequently both parties being before the Court and arguments having been heard decided that,

4. — Suits brought to set aside or restore attachment—Civil Procedure Code 1859 s 246—Summary decision—Limitation Act 1871 art 15 (1877 art 13)—Interpretation of Acts—Valuation of suits—Suits brought to set aside or restore an attachment upon a house in pursuance of the permission given in s 246 of the Civil Procedure Code may be regarded either as suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed so as to fall within s 1 cl 4 art. (c) of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), or as suits to obtain or set aside a summary decision or order in which case the stamp duty payable would be that prescribed by art 17 cl. 1 sch. II of the Court Fees Act. The Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment it is the duty of the Courts to treat such suits as belonging to the latter class (it being the more favourable for the suitors) and to impose fees accordingly. Decisions under s 246 of Act VIII of 1859 as to the removal or retention of attachments are summary decisions or orders within the meaning of art 17 cl. 1 sch. II of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). The words summary decision or order in this clause of the Court Fees Act mean decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal. The construction which has been given to these words or nearly similar words in the Limitation Acts (e.g. Act IX of 1871 sch II art 15 and Act XV of 1877 sch. II art 13) affords no guide to their construction in the Court Fees Act. When Acts are in pari materia they may be treated as forming a Code and may be read together; but when this is not so the construction which has been put upon one cannot be relied upon as a guide to the construction of another. The valuation of suits for the purpose of jurisdiction is perfectly distinct from their valuation for the fiscal purpose of Court-fees. Therefore Court Fees Acts which are fiscal enactments are not to be resorted to for construing enactments which fix the valuation of suits for the purpose of determining jurisdiction. Motichand Jaichand & Dadabhai Pestonjee, 11 Bom 155 explained. Parlay Tamoy & Dholapa Baghi I L R 4 Bom 123 dissented from by WESTROFF C.J. DATACHAND NEMCHAND & HEMCHAND DUT RAMCHAND I L R 4 Bom, 615

Fees Act, 1870 s 7 cl 4 and s 17—A suit praying merely for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to require the defendants to account to him and to permit him to inspect their books is simply a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief and falls within art 17 cl 3 of sch II of Act VII of 1870. A suit praying for such a declaration as the above and also for a positive order in the nature of a mandatory injunction for the production of the defendants' books and property in their hands or a suit praying for such declaration as the above and also for a positive decree for an account to be taken by the Court and for the production of the books and property would range under s 7 cl 4 art (c) of Act VII of 1870 as being a suit to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed and also within art (d) of the same section as being a suit to obtain an injunction and a suit of the third species described above would fall under art (f) of the same clause as being a suit for accounts. Quere—Whether in the case of a suit for a declaration of the right of the plaintiff to an account and to inspection of the defendants' books and for a mandatory injunction for the production of these books or of a suit for such declaration and for a positive decree for the taking of an account by the Court and the production of the defendants' books the plaintiff would by virtue of s 17 of Act VII of 1870 require a para's stamps under arts (d) and (f) of cl 4 s 7 or be sufficiently covered by the stamp under art. (c) of the same clause and whether assuming the declaration and the account each to require a stamp the prayer for an injunction or order for the production of books is not merely ancillary to and not a distinct subject from the taking of an account. Quere—Whether the provision in s 7 cl 4 of Act VII of 1870 that the amount of the fee payable in suits falling within that clause shall be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint is so inconsistent with that portion of s 31 of Act VIII of 1859 which permits the Court receiving the plaint to revise the valuation of the claim as to render that portion of s 31 of Act VIII of 1859 inoperative in suits within s 7 cl 4 of Act VII of 1870 notwithstanding the concluding passage in that clause. Quere—Whether the concluding passage in cl 4 s 7 of Act VII of 1870 is too express to admit of a limitation of the power of the Judge and leaves him the right to revise the valuation placed on suits under cl 4 by the plaintiff. But assuming this to be so it would generally not be advisable that the Judge should enhance the valuation on the reception of the plaint. profits and that such claims did not make him a partner an agent's remuneration being a share in the profits not constituting the agent a partner. Held by KEMP and MITTER JJ (releasing the prisoner) that though the all-wance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant the accused in this case distinctly pleaded he was a partner and not only that he was entitled to a share in the profits that the lower Courts did not specifically decide that the accused was a servant and that the prosecutor's remedy was a civil suit for an account. IN THE MATTER OF LALL CHAND ROY [8 W R, Cr, 37]

14 — Public servant—Penal Code s 409—A village shikri whose duty it was to assist in collecting the public revenue received grain from rayats and gave receipts as if for money received by virtue of a private arrangement. Held that he could not be convicted of criminal breach of trust by a public servant under s 409 of the Penal Code as he was not authorized to receive the public revenue in kind, and the party who delivered the grain did not thereby discharge himself from liability for the revenue. ANONYMOUS 4 Mad, Ap, 83

15 — Penal Code ss 408 409—Sentence Mitigation of—Where a Court inspector improperly delegated to a constable the custody etc. of Government moneys (taking from him private security to save himself from loss in case of defalcation) and the constable dishonestly converted the money to his own use although he afterwards restored it the case was held to fall under s 408 and not s 409 of the Penal Code, and the sentence reduced from ten years' transportation and a fine of Rs 500 to one year's rigorous imprisonment without fine. QUEEN v. BANES MADHVA GHOSH [8 W R, Cr, 1]

16 — Penal Code s 409—To constitute an offence under s 409 it is not necessary that the property should be that of Government but that it should have been entrusted to a public servant in that capacity. IN THE MATTER OF PAM SOODER PODDAR 30 L R, 516

17 — Penal Code s 409—Nab Nazir—The Nab Nazir is a public servant within the meaning of s 409 of the Penal Code and not the mere private servant of the Nazir. QUEEN v. MAHMOOD HOSSEIN 2 N W, 298

18 — Penal Code s 409—Absence of dishonest intention—Where the accused in his capacity of revenue patel received from the Government treasury small sums of money on account of certain temple allowances and did not on once pay over the sums to the persons entitled to receive them as he was bound to do, but it appeared that such persons were willing to trust him and that he had actually passed receipts which the accused forwarded to the revenue authorities—Held that the accused fulfilled the trust reposed in him by Government and that his mere retention of the money

19 *—Master and servant—Servant entrusted with money for payment to tradesman of account settled with master for a specific sum—Gratuity of tradesman to servant—Right of master to benefit of gratuity—Act XLV of 1860 ss 400-409—When a master entrusts his servant with money for the payment of an open account, i.e. an account of which the items have never been checked or settled and the tradesman makes the servant a present and the transaction amounts to a taxation of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant the latter obtains the reduction for his master's benefit the money in his hands always remains the master's property and if he appropriates it he commits criminal breach of trust. But where the master himself has settled the account with the tradesman for a specific sum and sends the servant with money and the servant after making the payment accepts a present from the tradesman in that case the servant does not commit criminal breach of trust inasmuch as the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it though it may be that according to the strict equitable doctrines of the Court of Chancery he is bound to account to the master & them see Hay v Case In re Canadian Oil Works Corporation L. R. 10 C. App. 693 referred to QUEEN EMPRESS v IMPAD KHAN I. L. R. 8 All. 120

20 *—Penal Code s 408—Criminal breach of trust by a servant—Criminal misappropriation—An accused person who was in the service of zamindars and whose duty it was to pay into the Collectorate Government revenue due in respect of their estates immediately before the due date of a list received from them a certain sum of money with no specific instruction as to its application. On receipt of that money he paid a portion only of it into the Collectorate on account of the revenue and having done so he then altered the challan given back to him showing the amount actually paid and made it appear that a much larger amount had been paid in than was the fact. This challan he sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (amongst other offences) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan. The accused was convicted on all the charges. It was contended that the charge under s 408 was not sustainable inasmuch as the money was not alleged to have been sent to the accused for the specific purpose of paying the Government revenue and that the account between him and his employers had not been adjusted and that it was not shown whether at the date of the alleged breach of trust the accused was indebted to his employer or the reverse. Held that as the money was sent to the accused* immediately before the last day and the challan was sent to the employers showing in its altered state the amount really payable as revenue which nearly covered the whole amount remitted it was reasonable to infer that the accused was aware of the implied purpose for which the money was remitted and as he deposited a very much smaller amount than that remitted and tried to pass off the altered challan as genuine there was a dishonest misappropriation of the difference sufficient to constitute the offence under s 408 LOHIT MOHAN SARKAR v QUEEN EMPRESS

21 *—Penal Code s 409—Rice condemned and ordered to be destroyed—Property according to the Penal Code—Sale of the same by municipal inspector—A certain consignment of rice lay unclaimed at the Kidderpore Docks and was advertised for sale by auction by the Port Commissioners. Before it was put up to auction the rice was found to be in a rotten condition. It was condemned and with the consent of the Port Commissioners seized by the officers of the Health Department of the Corporation of Calcutta and ordered to be destroyed. Held that assuming that the rice was entrusted by the Superintendent of the Health Department to the accused (who were inspectors employed in that department) for the purpose of destruction and that the accused instead of destroying the rice sold the same to a third party and retained the proceeds of such sale they did not commit the offence of criminal breach of trust as public servants. Semle—The accused committed no offence punishable under the Penal Code though they may have been guilty of infringing a departmental rule. EMPRESS v WILKINSON 2 C. # CRIMINAL MISAPPROPRIATION

13 ———— Trust arising from duty of public servant—Penal Code s 403—S 403 of the Penal Code does not limit the mode in which a trust arises whether by specific order or by reason of its being part of the proper duty of a public functionary. Where therefore it was proved that the head clerk of an office entrusted the management of stamps with the knowledge and sanction of his superiors to one of his assistants the latter was held to be guilty of criminal misappropriation by a public servant within the meaning of s 403 when he made away with the stamps. QUEEN v RAM DUTT DEY 13 W R Cr 77

14 ———— Separate items of money—Charge Form of—The misappropriation of each separate item of money with which a person is entrusted is a separate offence and the facts connected with it should form the subject of a separate enquiry. The duty of a committing officer in such a case is to select certain distinct items to frame his charges upon them and to adduce evidence specially upon those items. CHETTER v QUEEN 15 W R Cr 5

15 ———— Refusal to pay for goods purchased—Penal Code s 403—The prisoner who took certain hides from the prosecutrix but refused to pay for them was held not on that account guilty of dishonest misappropriation under s 403 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v BORSTUM MOORE [17 W R Cr 11]

16 ———— Removal of property claimed by accused—Penal Code s 403—A person having made a hole in the wall of his own house broke open a box and rummaged the contents to which he believed himself entitled but as to which there was a dispute making the removal appear to have been the act of thieves from the outside and entrusting the property to another person—Held not guilty of criminal misappropriation. THEWA RAM v EMPRESS 10 C L R 167

17 ———— Harvesting crops under attachment—Penal Code (Act XL) of 1860 s 206 403 424—A judgment debtor whose standing crops were attached harvested them while the attachment was in force and was convicted of theft. Held that the accused was not guilty of theft but of the offence of dishonestly removing the property under Penal Code s 424. PER BRUNSON J—The fence was also criminal misappropriation within the meaning of Indian Penal Code s 403. QUEEN EMPRESS v ORAYYA [1 L R 23 Mad. 151]

(1872, s. 466)—Acts done by public servant—Saw on to proceed on—Malak
I. L. R., s. 466 of the Code of Criminal Procedure extends to all acts committed by a public servant,
i.e., to acts which would have no special sanction except as acts done by a public servant; therefore, a Mahakari charged with fabrication of the record in a case decided before himself could not be tried on that charge except with the sanction specified in that section. Para. 1 of s. 466, which mentions a sanction by Government or its deputy is intended to apply at least chiefly to the cases of persons specially responsible to Government such as accountants who have failed in their duty and para. 2 which speaks of sanction by Government alone to persons purporting to exercise certain authority and with that pretext doing an act

(1872 s 486)—Acts done by public servant—Sanction to prosecution—Mafat Lars—S 466 of the Code of Criminal Procedure extends to all acts ostensibly done by a public servant s e to acts which would have no special significance except as acts done by a public servant therefore a mahalkari charged with fabricating the proceedings of a case decided before himself could not be tried on that charge except with the sanction
specified in that section Para. 1 of s 466 which mentions a sanction by Government or its deputy
is intended to apply at least chiefly to the cases of persons specially responsible to Government
such as accountants who have failed in their duty; and para. 2 which speaks of sanction by Government alone to persons professing to exercise
certain authority and with that pretext doing an act which is impeached by a subject on the ground of its being wholly unwarranted, or of an excess or impropriety of power kind 1. A mahalkari falls within the class of public servants contemplated in para. 1

1. ———— "Minor offence" Contravention of without formal charge—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1898) ss. 360, 366 and 376—Criminal Procedure Code (1882) s. 307—An offence under s. 365 of the Penal Code is within the meaning of s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code a minor offence as compared with offences under ss. 366 and 376 of the Penal Code and the High Court in dealing with a case under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code can convict an accused of the former offence without a formal charge having been framed Per BANKER J.—The words "minor offence" have not been defined by law; they are to be taken not in any technical sense but in their ordinary sense QUEEN EMPRESS v. SIVANATH MANDAL

2. ———— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1898) ss. 495—Cognizance of offences by Court—Criminal Procedure Code (1882) s. 199—Enticing away married woman—Conviction for minor offence where evidence is insufficient for grave offence—The complainant charged the accused with an offence under s. 495 of the Penal Code in respect of his wife. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s. 498 there being no complaint by the husband under s. 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the offence did not fall under s. 495 of the Criminal Procedure Code referred the case to the High Court. Held that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 495 a conviction under s. 498 may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence and yet is sufficient for a conviction for the graver one. *JATRA SURESH v. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s 498 of the Penal Code and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s 498 there being no complaint by the husband under s 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the offence did not fall under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred the case to the High Court. Held that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. 1 ————— Deposition taken before Magistrate before Sessions Judge—Discretion of Sessions Judge—The purpose of s 240 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as amended by s 20 of Act XI of 1874 is to make depositions given before Magistrates in the preliminary inquiry evidence in the trial before the Court of Sessions only when the Sessions Judge determines in the exercise of his discretion that they are to be used in this way. But the exercise of this discretion considering it as a matter of fact or law, is open to review by the Appellate Court. Queen v Amanulla

[11 Bom 281

2 ————— Former deposition of witness—Evidence Act s 80—The confession of a witness in the shape of a former deposition can be used as evidence against a prisoner only on the condition prescribed by s 240 Criminal Procedure Code 1872—that is it must have been duly taken by the committing officer in the presence of the person against whom it is to be used. The certificate of the Magistrate appended to such confession in order to afford prima facie evidence under s 80 of the Evidence Act in the circumstances mentioned in it relative to the taking of the statement ought to give the facts necessary to render the deposition admissible under s 240. Queen v Acschurup

4 ————— Witnesses before committing Magistrate—On the trial of a prisoner for the murder of his wife and child the witnesses for the prosecution gave evidence contradicting the evidence given by them before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge purporting to act under s 219 Act V of 1872 discarded the evidence taken before himself and grounded his judgment on the evidence given before the Magistrate and on this evidence convicted the prisoner and sentenced him to death. On appeal by the prisoner—Held that s 240 did not warrant such a course of proceeding. That section merely authorizes the Court to take a particular statement made by a witness before the Magistrate as the true statement notwithstanding that it is denied or a statement inconsistent with it was made by the witness before the Judge only if the Judge should see that the original statement was worthy of belief and does not mean that the Court should discard wholly the testimony of witnesses before it and have recourse to the testimony of the same persons given before another officer. Queen v Amanulla

5 ————— Use in Sessions Court of evidence taken before the committing Magistrate—Although under certain circumstances a Court of Sessions may use evidence given before the committing Magistrate as if it had been given before itself it is not proper for a Court of Sessions to base a conviction solely upon such evidence there being no other evidence on the record to corroborate it. Queen v Amanulla

6 ————— Duty of Sessions Judge as to evidence taken before the Magistrate—Sessions Judges should act with great caution in exercising the discretion given to them by s 288 Code of Criminal Procedure in admitting evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate. Where at a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge admitted, and s 288 Code of Criminal Procedure such evidence without any inquiry as to the allegation made by the witness that her statement before the Magistrate was made under pressure and threat by the police—Held that the District Judge should not have placed reliance on the evidence as given before the Magistrate and that he would have shown a better discretion if he had first made some inquiry by examining the police officer as to the restraint and pressure under which the statement was alleged to have been made. A witness was not examined in the Sessions Court with regard to the particular statements made by him before the committing Magistrate and he did not repeat those statements before the Sessions Court. Held that the Sessions Judge could not properly admit such statements in evidence under s 288 Criminal Procedure Code. Where a witness was examined in the Sessions Court and he had no disposition in any way to recede from any statement he had made before the committing Magistrate

the admission of that deposition by a Sessions Judge under s. 288 Code of Criminal Procedure was improper. Queen v. Amannulla 12 B I L P 15 21 B I Cr 50 and Queen Empress v. Dhan Sahai 5 L R. All 657 11 Week. Where a medical officer gave evidence before the committing Magistrate and it was not certified that the evidence was given in presence of the accused—Held that the admission of such evidence by the Sessions Judge under s. 288 Code of Criminal Procedure was also improper. Where the police had kept a witness under surveillance for four days and the Sessions Judge considered that they were justified under the circumstances of the case—Held that there is no warrant in law for the judge to keep the witness under such restraint and that statements so obtained can hardly be regarded as voluntary. BAIRAGI LAL v. EMPRESS

[4 C W N. 49]

7 — Previous statement to committing Magistrate retracted in Sessions Court—Use of such statement by Sessions Court as substantial evidence.—Where a witness who has made a statement before the committing Magistrate subsequently recants from that statement in the Court of Session the statement made before the committing Magistrate can be used under s. 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to contradict the witness but the use of such statement as substantial evidence of the facts alleged by the witness on the prior occasion is fraught with the gravest peril and could never have been the intention of the Legislature. QUEEN EMPRESS v. NIRMAL DAS 1 L R 22 All 445

8 — Deposit on in former case—Refusal to allow cross examination of witnesses.—A B and C having been charged with murder before a Magistrate two vakils presented their vakaltnamahas and applied to be allowed to conduct the defence of the accused. The Magistrate refused permission and after recording the depositions of the witnesses committed the accused to take their trial before the Sessions Court. In the Court of the Magistrate the only material evidence for the prosecution was that of three witnesses who on being examined in the Sessions Court denied all

knowledge of the facts to which they had deposed before the Magistrate. Two of them denied having made the statements recorded, while the third admitted the statements attributed to him but asserted they were false and made under pressure. The Sessions Judge disbelieving the statements made in his Court thereupon under s. 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1872 (as amended by s. 20 of the Amending Act) used the previous depositions as evidence in the case and mainly upon these convicted the accused of murder and sentenced them to transportation for life. Against this conviction and sentence the prisoners appealed to the High Court on the ground that the previous depositions ought not to have been used as evidence in the case as the Magistrate had refused to allow their leaders to appear and cross-examine the witnesses who made the depositions. The High Court affirmed the convictions and sentence. IN THE MATTER OF DHAM MENDUL

Meaning of words no evidence in section.—The words "no evidence" in the second and third clauses of s. 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1892) must not be read as meaning "no satisfactory trustworthy or conclusive evidence." If there is evidence the trial must go on to its close; when in trials by jury the jury and in other trials the Judge after considering the opinions of the assessors have to find on the facts. It is only in the absence of any evidence as to the commission of the offence by the accused that the Court can record an acquittal without allowing the trial to go on or obtaining the opinion of the assessors or that the Court can direct the jury without going into the defence to return a verdict of not guilty. *Queen Empress v. for orders. It appeared that B whose understanding was of the most limited character was caught at night in a house with some anklets in his possession. He was a lad of 18 or 16 years of age and had been deaf and dumb from his birth. He sometimes lived with his father and sometimes by begging and there was little doubt that hunger had driven him to break into the house. He had never been in arrest before. The Court recommended that he should be made over to his father. QUEEN v GANGA 7 N W. 131

2. — Deaf and dumb person—Ability to understand charge.—In the case of an accused person who was deaf and dumb the Deputy Magistrate who tried and convicted him considered that he did not understand the proceedings and accordingly referred the case to the Magistrate under s 181 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate considered that the accused did understand what he was charged with. Held that the finding of the Magistrate must prevail and s 180 did not apply. DOORJI HIRWAL v ANANTMOO

3. — Deaf and dumb person Trial of.—The High Court under the circumstances of this case which came before it under the last clause of s 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1872 set aside the conviction of the prisoner who was deaf and dumb and directed that he be admonished and discharged. DWARKANATH HALDAR v MOHAR CHAND HANDE 23 W R Cr., 36

4. — Deaf and dumb person Trial of.—The High Court may under s 186 Criminal Procedure Code in the trial of a person who is deaf and dumb and who cannot understand the proceedings against him or plead to the charge treat the proceedings as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence upon the prisoner according to the facts which seem to be established in the course and as the result of those proceedings. In this case the Court had no doubt that the prisoner was guilty but before passing final orders it gave the prisoner a further opportunity of being heard, and accordingly directed the Magistrate to give him notice. QUEEN v BOWKA HANI 22 W R Cr, 36

An accused person who had been for some time confined in a lunatic asylum was tried and committed to the Sessions by a Deputy Magistrate on a charge of murder. The accused was deaf and dumb and could not be made to understand the proceedings which had been taken. On the proceedings being forwarded to the High Court under s 311 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it was held that the law does not contemplate that the Sessions trial should necessarily take place. That it is discretionary with the High Court on a commitment made to order the Sessions trial to be held and the High Court must consider whether any benefit would be likely to result especially to the accused by such trial. The High Court in this case having come to the conclusion that no benefit would be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Sessions found that the accused was guilty of the alleged murder but that he was by reason of unsoundness of mind not responsible for his action and directed him to be kept in the district jail to await the orders of Government. QUEEN EMPRESS v BOWKA BOWKA

2. — s 423 (a) and ss 247 404 417—Acquittal—Appeal Powers of District Magistrate—S 423 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only to a High Court. A second class Magistrate having held that a prima facie case had been established against the accused in a case of mischief adjourned the trial to enable the accused to adduce evidence. On the day to which the trial was adjourned the complainant not being present the Magistrate acquitted the accused under s 217 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The District Magistrate entertained an appeal from this order under s 423 (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure reversed it and directed a re-hearing on the ground that the complainant and his wakil had appeared before the Court shortly after the case had been dismissed by the second class Magistrate. Held on reference to the High Court that as the words "Sessions case" in s. 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code had reference only to a case triable exclusively by a Court of Session the Magistrate's action could not be supported under that section but that (as further evidence in addition to that taken by the Deputy Magistrate was forthcoming) it was sustainable on the principle laid down in *Express v. 7 ————— Discharge of accused persons under s. 215—Revival of proceedings at the instance of the Court of Session—Commitment of accused persons—Certain persons were charged under s. 417 of the Penal Code and were discharged by the Magistrate inquiring into the offence under s. 215 of Act X of 187. The Court of Session considering that the accused persons had been improperly discharged forwarded the record to the Magistrate of the district suggesting to him to make the case over to a Subordinate Magistrate with directions to enquire into any offence other than the offence in respect of which the accused persons had been discharged which the evidence on the record showed to have been committed. The Subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over made an inquiry and committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session on charges under ss. 353 and 470 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the Court of Session was not competent to direct the accused persons to be committed under s. 296 of Act V of 1872 the case not being a Sessions case within the meaning of that section and that the commitment was consequently illegal. Held that there was no direction to commit within the meaning of that section that is to say to send the accused persons at once to the Sessions Court without further inquiry and whether or not the inquiry was made in consequence of the suggestions of the Court of Session was immaterial and that the inquiry upon the charges under ss. 353 and 470 of the Penal Code was rightly held by the Subordinate Magistrate and the commitment could not be impeached. *EXPRESS v. But under s. 296, as amended by Act VI of 1874 the Court has power to direct the subordinate Court to enquire into any offence for which it could make a commitment should be ordered. When a commitment made under such a commitment made however a trial under such a commitment made by order of a Sessions Judge has been caused by no actual failure of justice has been caused by the error of the Sessions Judge s. 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be a bar to the reversal of his judgment. *EXPRESS v. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODES (ACT V OF 1898 ACT X OF 1893 ACT X OF 1872 ACTS XXV OF 1891 AND VIII OF 1889)—continued

Procedure Code is bad in form if it does not specify the offence for which the parties are to be committed for trial at the Sessions. A trial for the offence of cheating is not a Sessions case within the meaning of s 296 having regard to the first portion of the definition of Sessions case in s 4 of the Code, which must be read as if the word only followed the words triable by a Court of Session. JAY KUNY SINGH v MAY PATTER 21 W R Cr 41

10 ——— Summoning or giving notice to accused person—The Sessions Judge under s 296 Criminal Procedure Code 1872 made an order upon the Deputy Magistrate for the commitment of the accused who had previously been discharged by the Deputy Magistrate but it was alleged that such order of the Sessions Judge was made without calling upon the prisoners to show cause in the matter. Held that although there is a thing in s 296 with regard to summoning or giving notice to the accused person no person should be affected in his personal liberty without having opportunity given him to answer the charge for which he is arrested and put into prison. The Court accordingly was of opinion that if the accused had no opportunity given them of meeting the charge the commitment was not a good commitment. IN THE MATTER OF THE PRISON OF BUNDHOOD

On the application of the complainant the District Magistrate directed further inquiry into the case under s 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and on a reference to the Court of Sessions the Sessions Judge held that as no inquiry into the charge of theft had been held the order was legal. Held that the District Magistrate had no power to pass such an order and s 437. QUEEN EMPRESS v PARAMPURI

Further inquiry—Proceedings against accused—Notice—No order affecting an accused in a criminal matter should be made without giving him notice so as to enable him to appear and show cause against it. A Sessions Judge has no power under s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to direct a particular Magistrate by name to make the further inquiry contemplated by that section. The further inquiry contemplated by s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an inquiry upon further materials not a re hearing of the matter upon the same evidence which was before the Magistrate who held the first inquiry. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHUNDI CHURN BHUTTA CHAKRA CHUNDI CHURN BHUTTACHARJEA v. A criminal charge instituted before a Magistrate of the first class was finally disposed of by him by an order discharging the accused. Subsequently the Magistrate of the district proceeding under s 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directed a further inquiry to be made by a subordinate Magistrate. This order was made without notice to the accused. Held that the Magistrate of the district had no jurisdiction to direct a further inquiry. Scrabble—That as a matter of strict law the accused was not entitled to be heard by the District Magistrate before granting the order directing the inquiry. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF NOBIS KRISTO MOOKERJEE v. under s 437 Criminal Procedure Code that further inquiry should be made and the accused called on to enter upon his defence. The accused was not called upon to show cause why a further inquiry should not be made but a summons in the terms of s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code was issued to him. On his appearance he was tried by the Magistrate of the district convicted and sentenced. The witnesses for the prosecution were not recalled but the Magistrate relied upon their evidence as recorded in the first trial and also upon the statement of a witness for the defence which was not receivable in evidence. Held that the proceedings of the Magistrate of the district were irregular first because notice to show cause why action should not be taken against him in the terms of s 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not served upon the accused person before proceedings extensively under that section were commenced and secondly because the subsequent proceedings of the Magistrate were not such as are contemplated by the provisions of s 437 inasmuch as the conviction was practically based upon evidence which was not recorded in the course of a further inquiry before the Magistrate of the district but upon evidence which was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate and had been adjudicated upon by that officer and such irregularities were fatal to the conviction. QUEEN v. Further inquiry—Power of District Magistrate to direct—A Subordinate Magistrate—Compoundable offence—A criminal charge under s 418 of the Penal Code having been instituted the accused was sent up by the police before a Deputy Magistrate of the first class. Previous to any evidence being taken the complainant intimated to the Magistrate that the case had been amicably settled and that he did not wish to proceed further in the matter upon which the Magistrate recorded an order of compromise in defendant's favour. Subsequently the Magistrate of the District relying upon ss 219 and 220 and professing to act under s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code directed the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and proceed regularly with the case. Held further that in addition to the Magistrate's order not being warrantable by the fact it was ultra vires inasmuch as the Deputy Magistrate was a Magistrate of the first class and not inferior to the District Magistrate and to give the District Magistrate jurisdiction to call for a record under s 435 from another

The term further inquiry in s 437 is not restricted to inquiry upon further materials or further or additional evidence. Before directing further inquiry under s 437 it is not obligatory on the District Magistrate to give notice to the person discharged or against whom the complaint was dismissed. When an order directing such inquiry is made the Subordinate Magistrate to whom it is directed has jurisdiction and is bound to carry it out. The Magistrate recorded a brief statement by the complainant but did not ask him if he had any witnesses to call. An order was passed directing that a copy of the petition of complaint should be sent to the police station calling for a report on the matter and on receipt of the report the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under s 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There was nothing in the Magistrate's original order to show that he saw reason to distrust the truth of the complaint nor did he direct a local investigation to be made by a police officer for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. Subsequent to the dismissal of the complaint the same complainant brought a fresh complaint upon the same facts against the same person in the same Court and upon this charge the accused were tried and convicted and sentenced. (Act V of 1838) s 43 - Notice to an accused person is necessary in point of law before an order under s. 43 can be passed but as a matter of discretion it is proper that such notice should be given. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (PRINCEP WILSON TOMLINSON DOUGLAS LIGOR and O'HENRY JJ) - After an inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate and the discharge of an accused person a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has jurisdiction under s. 43 of the Criminal Procedure Code to enter a further inquiry or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate as when a further evidence is forthcoming. (Prinsep J dissenting) the words "further inquiry" in that section mean the inquiry preliminary to trial which regularly results in a charge or discharge and do not include the trial. And if on the evidence taken the accused ought to be committed then in a case trial only at the Sessions the proper course is to commit under s. 43; in other cases to refer to the High Court. Per PRINSEP J - The word inquiry includes a trial and the "further inquiry" would therefore allow of the framing of a charge and the cross examination of witnesses for the prosecution. Per LESTERHAM CJ and GHOSE J - The power given by s. 43 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further inquiry is confined to cases in which the revising officer is satisfied for one of the reasons mentioned in s. 43a that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials and that with a more exhaustive inquiry further material would be forthcoming. It was not intended that such an enquiry should be granted simply for the reconsideration of evidence. IN THE MATTER OF HARI DAS SANYAL v SARITULLA I L R. 15 Calo 608

25 - Further inquiry - Notice to the accused - Practice - Before making an order for further inquiry under s. 437 Criminal Procedure Code a notice should be given to the accused person to give him an opportunity of being heard upon the question whether any further inquiry should be made. Hari Das Sanyal v Saritulla I L R. 15 Calo 609 followed. 26 - Discretion of Court - Further inquiry - Notice - Although there is nothing in s. 437 rendering it incumbent to give notice before directing a further inquiry yet a Court would not be exercising a proper discretion if before ordering a further inquiry it did not give notice to the accused to show cause against such order. Where therefore a further inquiry was directed with out such previous notice to the accused the High Court set aside the order. Hari Das Sanyal v Saritulla I L R. 15 Calo 608 followed. IN THE MATTER OF AMIT KARIADAN 3 C W N 249

at least inspector visited a toddy shop where the complainant and one D were employed as agents for the sale of toddy. Having reason to suspect that an offence under the Abkari Act (Bombay Act V of 1854) had been committed the accused made an inquiry in the course of which the complainant made certain statements implicating his fellow servant. The accused thereupon resolved to prosecute D and make the complainant a witness in the case. In order to prevent him being tutored, the accused ordered his spy to bring the complainant to his camp and there detained him during the night and on the following morning sent him in charge of a spy to a Magistrate's Court where the complainant repeated the statements made by him before the accused. He was then allowed to go away. The accused prosecuted D and in the course of his trial admitted in his deposition that he had ordered his spy to bring the complainant to his camp and had detained him there during the night. After the termination of D's trial the complainant charged the accused with wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code. The accused pleaded that the complainant had voluntarily come to his tent to have his statements reduced to writing and that he had of his own accord stopped in his camp during the night. The trying Magistrate held this plea proved and discharged the accused under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1859). The Sessions Judge held that though the accused had detained the complainant in his camp during the night still he was not guilty of any offence under the Penal Code as he had acted with malice and to the best of his judgment. He therefore declined to interfere or order a further inquiry. Held by the High Court on revision that the trying Magistrate had wrongly omitted to take into consideration the admissions made by the accused in his deposition in D's case. Those admissions had an important bearing on the present case. They were admissible in evidence against the accused and they were left out of consideration the inquiry was necessarily incomplete and imperfect. Further inquiry was therefore ordered. DHANIA v CLIFFORD

Privilege of European British subject—Waiver of privilege—The provisions of s. 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the kind of Court which shall have jurisdiction and shall not have jurisdiction to inquire into a complaint or try a charge against a European British subject constitute a privilege that is to say they are not so much words taking away jurisdiction entirely as words which confer on the British subject a right to be tried by a certain class of Magistrates and by no others which right the Code enables him to give up s. 81 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be construed strictly with s. 72 and before a European British subject can be considered to have waived the privilege conferred upon him by s. 72 it must appear that his rights under that section have been distinctly made known to him and that he must have been enabled to exercise his choice and judgment whether he would or would not claim the rights. The waiver of privilege spoken of in s. 81 must be an absolute giving up of all the rights with reference to Ch VII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which a European British subject has; and the words "dealt with as such before the Magistrate" mean everything contained in the chapter—that is to say the tribunal having cognizance of the case the procedure and also the punishment to which the accused would be liable IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF QUIROS FARRIES & ALLEY

Sending case for investigation by Magistrate.—A Subordinate Judge, finding that a person had made a false verification of a plaint sent his case for investigation to a Magistrate of the district who refused to investigate it on the ground that the alleged offence was one triable exclusively by the Court of Session to which the Subordinate Judge himself should under s 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure have committed it. Held that the Magistrate of the district was bound to proceed with the investigation of the case according to s 16 of Act XXIII of 1861. REG v AMBOTA NATH

[7 Bom., Cr 20]

2. — Preliminary enquiry—Procedure.—Under s 471 Criminal Procedure Code the Court must first make a preliminary enquiry to satisfy itself that a specific charge coming under the sections mentioned in it ought to be preferred against the accused and after being so satisfied it must either commit the case or send the case to the Magistrate for enquiry whether a commitment should be made or not. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HALL PROSUNNO BAGCHER

4. — Act XXIII of 1861 s 16
Order sending case to Magistrate for enquiry into offence of giving false evidence.—Preliminary enquiry—Sequence of charge.—Although s 16 of Act XXIII of 1861 gives Civil Courts powers similar to those conferred on Civil and Criminal Courts alike by s 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the whole law as to the procedure in cases with these sections is now embodied in s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In a suit brought to recover a sum of certain property the Judge decided one of the issues raised in the plaintiff's favour but on the important issue as to whether the plaintiff ever had possession he found for the defendant. The plaintiff was not examined, but on the issue as to whether he called two witnesses. The Judge directed the defendant to make statements, and considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case gave judgment for the defendant with out requiring him to give evidence on that issue. In the concluding paragraph of the judgment the Judge inserted the depositions of the two witnesses above referred to, together with the observations made of their evidence to be sent to the Magistrate with a view to his enquiring whether or not the plaintiff had voluntarily given false evidence in the proceedings, and he further directed the Magistrate to enquire whether or not the plaintiff had abetted the offence of giving false evidence on the ground that as the witnesses were the plaintiff's servants he must personally have influenced them and also to enquire whether the plaintiff which the plaintiff had attested contained statements which he knew to be false. On a motion to quash this order—Held that under s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Judge had no power to send a case to a Magistrate except when after having made such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground (i.e. ground of a nature higher than mere surmise or suspicion) for directing judicial enquiry into the matter of a specific charge and that the Judge is bound to indicate the particular statements or averments in respect of which he considers that there is ground for a charge into which the Magistrate ought to enquire and that the order was bad because the Judge had made no preliminary enquiry and because it was too vague and general in its character. QUEEN v BAYJOO LALL IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BAHOOL LALL

5. — Power of and procedure of Court in making order under section—Order directing prosecution.—Before a Court is justified in making an order under s 470, directing the prosecution of any person it ought to have before it direct evidence raising the offence upon the person whom it is sought to charge either in the course of the preliminary enquiry referred to in that section or in the earlier proceedings out of which the enquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some sort of suspicion that the person had been guilty of an offence; but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by the person who is to be prosecuted. Queen v Bayjoo Lall I L R 1 Cal 450 and In the matter of the petition of Hall Prosunno Bagcher 23 W R., Cr. 39 followed. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HAREET NATH SIKDAR v SHRI H CHITRAVATI NIKHIL

9. ———— Just int. on offer and proof on appeal in Civil Court.—If in the course of a proceeding either civil or criminal a Judge or Magistrate finds clear ground for believing that either the parties to the proceeding or their witnesses have committed perjury or any other offence against public justice he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such persons under s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code with any further enquiry than that which he has already held in his own Court. As a matter of discretion and propriety it is right for a Court before committing a person on a charge of perjury upon his own uncontradicted statement, to wait till the hearing of the appeal where an appeal is pending in the case in which he is charged with such perjury. IN THE MATTER OF MURRAY LALL GHOSE 1 L. 10. ———— Power to commit for offences.—S. 471 deals with a more extended class of cases, viz. all those mentioned in ss. 467, 468, and 469 in which not merely a Civil Court but any Court Civil or Criminal and whether possessing or not possessing the power to commit to the Court of Session is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for holding, on enquiry, and it enacts the procedure to be followed by the Court which may elect to adopt one of two courses that is to say it may either commit a case to the Court of Session if and where it has the power to do so, or, if it has not that power or is not disposed to exercise it it may send the case to a Magistrate having power to try or commit for trial the accused person for the offence charged. EXPRESS v. LOFAT NATHU 1 L. R. 4 Bom 287

11. ———— Offence under.—Where a Court thinks that there is sufficient ground for enquiring into a charge mentioned in s. 467, 468 or 469 of Act X of 1872 it should proceed under s. 471 of that Act. 12. ———— Preliminary enquiry.—An order made under s. 471 of Act X of 1872 sending a case for enquiry to a Magistrate is not necessarily bad because the Court did not make a preliminary enquiry before making such order. The law requires only such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary. Held therefore where a Magistrate being of opinion that both the parties to a suit tried by him had given false evidence therein on certain points sent the case for enquiry to the Magistrate under s. 471 of Act X of 1872 with a proceeding embodying the facts of the case and charging the parties respectively with giving false evidence on such points and the case was nothing to show that any enquiry that the Magistrate had

a. 551—*Unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose—If sent Custody of—A Hindu girl under the age of 14 years went of her own accord to a Muslim house where she was received and allowed to remain. The mother and husband of the girl thereupon applied to the Magistrate who took proceedings under s. 400 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The lady superintendent of the Muslim house denied that the girl was legally married and alleged that she was practically being brought up with the connivance of the mother to a life of prostitution. The Magistrate after recording evidence found that the girl was legally married, that the other allegation was not established, and that although she went to and remained in the Muslim house of her own free will there was under the circumstances an unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose. He further found that there were no facts established which would disentitle the husband or the mother to the custody of the girl and passed an order under the section directing the girl to be restored to her mother. Held upon the facts as found by the Magistrate as it was immaterial whether the girl did or did not consent to remain at the Muslim house there was an unlawful detention within the meaning of these words as used in the section as the girl was kept against the will of those who were lawfully entitled to have charge of her. Held also that s. 551 applying only as it does to women and female children must not be construed so as to make it include purposes which, although not unlawful in themselves might only become so when entertained towards a child in opposition to the wishes of its guardian but that the purpose whether entertained towards a woman or a female child must be in itself unlawful. Held consequently that in the circumstances of the case there was no detention for an unlawful purpose and that the Magistrate had no power to make the order. Held further that although the Magistrate had no power under the section to make the order he did it did not follow that the Court should direct the girl to be restored to the custody of the lady superintendent even if it had the power to do so and that having regard to the circumstances of the case there was nothing to justify such an order being passed. — s 551—Unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose—Infringement of Custody—A Hindu girl under the age of 14 years went of her own accord to a Mission house where she was received and allowed to remain. The mother and husband of the girl thereupon applied to the Magistrate who took proceedings under s. 501 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate, on the application of the Mission house, denied that the girl was lawfully married and alleged that she was practically being brought up with the assistance of the mother to a life of prostitution. The Magistrate, after recording evidence found that the girl was lawfully married, that the other allegation was not established, and that although she went to and remained in the Mission house of her own free will there was under the circumstances an unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose. He further found that there were no facts established which would disentitle the husband or the mother to the custody of the girl and passed an order under the section directing the girl to be restored to her mother. Held upon the facts as found by the Magistrate as it was immaterial whether the girl did or did not consent to remain at the Mission house there was an unlawful detention within the meaning of these words as used in the section as the girl was kept against the will of those who were lawfully entitled to have charge of her. Held also that s 51 applies not only as to women and female children but must not be construed so as to make it include purposes which, although not unlawful in themselves might only become so when entertained towards a child in opposition to the wishes of its guardian but that the purpose whether entertained towards a woman or a male child must be itself unlawful. Held consequently that in the circumstances of the case there was no detention for an unlawful purpose and that the Magistrate had no power to make the order. Held further that although the Magistrate had no power under the section to make the order he did it did not follow that the Court should direct the girl to be restored to the custody of the lady superintendent even if it had the power to do so; and that having regard to the circumstances of the case there was nothing to justify such an order being passed. Irregularity—Waiver or consent by prisoner—Recording statements of witnesses—The jailor of a district jail being accused by one of the jail clerks of falsifying his accounts and defrauding the Government the matter was enquired into by the District Magistrate and the jailor was by the Magistrate a order placed on trial before a Bench of Magistrates consisting of the District Magistrate himself & the Officiating Superintendent of the jail and three other Honorary Magistrates. The prisoner and his pleaders were alleged to have stated before the commencement of the trial on being questioned that they had no objection to the composition of the Bench but after the charges had been framed the prisoner's counsel objected to the Bench as formed. The District Magistrate directed the Government pleader to prosecute and both the District Magistrate and L gave evidence for the prosecution. After the case for the prosecution was closed two formal charges were drawn up namely that the prisoner had debited Government with the price of more oil seed than he actually purchased and that he had received payment for certain oil at a higher rate than he credited to Government. The moneys the receipt of which were the subject of the first charge were obtained by the prisoner on the strength of certain vouchers which he had induced L to sign as correct and L had sanctioned the sale at the rates credited to Government. Upon the prisoner's giving the names of the witnesses he intended to call in his defence L was deputed by his brother Magistrates to examine some of them who were connected with the jail in order to guard against deviation and the depositions so taken were placed on the record to be used by either party though not themselves as evidence. The prisoner was convicted. On a motion to quash the conviction—Held that the recording the statements of the prisoner's witnesses was irregular. The appointment of the Magistrate who, in the first instance, had tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an enquiry subsequently directed in the same case censured as being unprecedented and objectionable. A Public Prosecutor should be without a personal interest in the case which he conducts. It is undesirable that Magistrates whose decisions are under appeal or who have been engaged in promoting the prosecution, or police officers concerned in a case should sit on the bench beside or converse privately in Court with the Judge who is engaged in trying the prisoners' appeal. The prisoner and his pleaders were alleged to have stated before the commencement of the trial on being questioned that they had no objection to the composition of the Bench but after the charges had been framed the prisoner's counsel objected to the Bench as formed. The District Magistrate directed the Government pleader to prosecute and both the District Magistrate and L gave evidence for the prosecution. After the case for the prosecution was closed two formal charges were drawn up namely that the prisoner had debited Government with the price of more oil seed than he actually purchased and that he had received payment for certain oil at a higher rate than he credited to Government. The moneys the receipt of which were the subject of the first charge were obtained by the prisoner on the strength of certain vouchers which he had induced L to sign as correct and L had sanctioned the sale at the rates credited to Government. Upon the prisoner's giving the names of the witnesses he intended to call in his defence L was deputed by his brother Magistrates to examine some of them who were connected with the jail in order to guard against deviation and the depositions so taken were placed on the record to be used by either party though not themselves as evidence. The prisoner was convicted. On a motion to quash the conviction—Held that the recording the statements of the prisoner's witnesses was irregular. If a charge of an offence not triable summarily is laid and sworn to the Magistrate must proceed with the case accordingly unless he is at the outset in a position to show from the deposition of the complainant that the circumstances of aggravation are really mere exaggeration and not to be believed. Therefore a Magistrate when he has before him a person charged with having been armed with a deadly weapon while a member of an unlawful assembly is not at liberty to disregard that part of the charge which charges the prisoner with having been armed with a deadly weapon and so to give himself jurisdiction to try the case summarily and then by inflicting a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months to deprive the prisoner of his right of appeal. EXPRESS v. 41. Evidence given at previous trial treated as evidence. Criminal Procedure Code s. 333. Evidence Act (I of 1872) s. 107. At the trial of a party of Hindus for robbing the Magistrate instead of examining the witnesses for the prosecution caused to be produced a copy of the examination in chief of the same witnesses which had been recorded at a previous trial of a party of Mahomedans who were opposed to the Hindus in the same riot. These copies were read out to the witnesses, who were then cross-examined by the prisoners and no objection to this procedure was taken on the prisoners' behalf. The accused were convicted. Held that although the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular the irregularity was cured by the provisions of s. 333 of the Criminal Procedure Code and of s. 107 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) as it was not shown that there had been any failure of justice or that the accused had been substantially prejudiced and as the matters elicited in cross-examination were sufficient to sustain the conviction. See *State v. 44. Irregularity in omitting to call on accused for defence. Criminal Procedure Code (1882) s. 259 and s. 263 (d) and s. 337. Misdirection to jury. The formality of calling upon an accused person to enter on his defence under the provisions of s. 259 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a mere formality but is an essential part of a criminal trial. Omission to do so occasions a failure of justice and is not cured by s. 337 of the Code. To allow the jury to pronounce their verdict before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence is a misdirection though the Judge omits to charge the jury at all. In such a case s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not stand in the way of the Appellate Court's interfering with the verdict of the jury. See State v. Smith, 100 W. R. Cr. 81.

After five witnesses had been examined, the Judge asked the jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and, on their stating that they did not, he gave the evidence and waived to stop the case. The Judge recorded a verdict of acquittal. a yadast from a revenue officer and committing accused without examining complainant.—A revenue officer sent a yadast to a third class Magistrate charging a certain person with having disobeyed a summons issued by the revenue officer. The third class Magistrate thereupon tried and convicted the accused under s 174 of the Penal Code. The District Magistrate referred this case on the ground that the conviction was bad under s 530 (k) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. 62. Criminal Procedure Code 1892 s 530 cl (p)—Offence originally cognizable by a second class Magistrate subsequently non cognizable by reason of an aggravating circumstance.—Duty of inferior Court.—The accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt as members of an unlawful assembly under ss 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact and he convicted the accused under s 325 of the Code. The accused appealed. The District Magistrate who heard on appeal and the first class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals were both of opinion that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s 326 of the Penal Code and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the second class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper under the circumstances of the case to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge on examining the record of the case was of opinion that as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate his proceedings were void ab initio under s 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He therefore referred the case to the High Court and recommended that the convictions under s. 325 should be set aside. Held that the proceedings before the second class Magistrate were not void ab initio as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code with which they were originally charged. Held also that though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation such as the use of a dangerous weapon which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings as the accused were not in any way prejudiced and the sentences were not inadequate. QUEEN EMPRESS v GURDITA under s 498 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) with having enticed away a married woman and under s 497 with having committed adultery. The woman alleged to have been enticed away resided in Bombay but the alleged adultery took place at Khandala outside the jurisdiction. At the enquiry before the Magistrate in Bombay objection was taken as to his jurisdiction with regard to the charge of adultery. The Magistrate however overruled the objections and committed the accused for trial. At the trial an application was made on behalf of the accused, under s 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1892) that the commitment should be quashed and a fresh enquiry directed on the ground that an objection had been taken to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Held refusing the application that the commitment began an order (see Queen Empress v Thakur I L R 8 Bom 312) under s. 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code the commitment should not be quashed unless a failure of justice would be caused by proceeding with the trial. QUEEN EMPRESS v INOUE

Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil litigation.—Civil Procedure Code (1892) s 278.—Inquiry into claim to attached property.—Subsequent civil suit by claimant to establish his right to the property.—Criminal Procedure Code (1892) s 379.—It is not an invariable rule that criminal proceedings should be stayed during the pendency of civil litigation regarding the same subject matter. Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No 1 applied to have the attachment raised on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry which was made under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XII of 186) he produced the sale-deed and accused No. 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was a forgery and rejected the claim. I received up then under s. 418 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 185) he held the inquiry directed by that section and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. said deed and act aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit. Held refusing the application that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit. 1 K K DEVI v. *Power of the High Court to stay proceedings before Magistrate pending a civil suit.—Per RAMSING J.—*The High Court has no power to direct that criminal proceedings in the Court of a Magistrate should be stayed until the disposal of a civil suit in which the question at issue in the criminal proceedings shall have been decided. In the matter of Ramji v. Ramji 11 L R. Sup. 101 220 followed. It is very doubtful if the High Court has any power to pass an order quashing the proceedings before a Magistrate. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly authorizes the High Court to quash pending proceedings. *Per GHOSH J.—*A proceeding in a criminal Court should not as a general rule be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit in regard to the same subject-matter but ordinarily it is not desirable if the parties to the two proceedings are substantially the same and the prosecution is but a private prosecution, and the issues in the two Courts are substantially identical that both the cases should go on at one and the same time. It is open to the Magistrate having regard to the facts of the case before him, to consider whether it is not desirable that the proceedings in his Court should be stayed till the decision of the civil suit or for a limited period of time and it is also open to him to put the defendant on terms as to appearance or otherwise if he does stay proceedings. The High Court has the power to order a Magistrate to stay proceedings in his Court if a sufficient cause is shown in that behalf is made out. But inasmuch as the Legislature has given him the power to regulate the proceedings in his own Court the direction should ordinarily be left to him either to stay proceedings or not as he, in the circumstances of each case may think right and proper. BAJ KUMARI DEBI v. One of the accused had made a confessional statement before the Magistrate who recorded it but did not make on it a memorandum to the effect stated in Criminal Procedure Code s 164 and did not admit it in evidence for the reason that the accused was produced from the custody of the police in which he had been detained for five days and there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat him as an approver. It appeared that a perusal of the preliminary register would have shown that the accused were either guilty under s 306 or not guilty under s 395 at all. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge with a jury. The confessional statement was not admitted in evidence. The jury found the accused not guilty of dacoity but the Judge disagreeing with the verdict referred the case to the High Court under Criminal Procedure Code s 307. Held (1) that the procedure adopted by the Judge was wrong and that he should have tried the accused with the aid of assessors under Indian Penal Code s 306 (2) that the Judge should have enquired under Criminal Procedure Code s 533 whether the confessional statement had been duly made and (3) that under the circumstances the High Court should determine on the evidence on record after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury whether the accused were guilty under s 395. QUEEN EMPRESS v. The District Magistrate referred the case on the ground that the conviction was bad under s 530 (k) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held that as the yadast amounted to a complaint within the meaning of s 4 although the complainant was not examined on oath as required by s 200 the conviction was not illegal. QUEEN EMPRESS v. MOUV I. L. R. II Mad., 443

62. *Criminal Procedure Code 1882 s 530 cl (p)—Offence originally cognizable by a second class Magistrate subsequently non cognizable by reason of an aggravating circumstance—Duty of inferior Court—*The accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt as members of an unlawful assembly under ss 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact and he convicted the accused under s 325 of the Code. The accused appealed. The District Magistrate who heard one appeal and the first class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals were both of opinion that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s 325 of the Penal Code and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the second class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper under the circumstances of the case to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge on examining the record of the case was of opinion that as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate his proceedings were void ab initio under s 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He therefore referred the case to the High Court and recommended that the convictions under s 825 should be set aside. Held that the proceedings before the second class Magistrate were not void ab initio as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code with which they were originally charged. Held also that though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation such as the use of a dangerous weapon which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings as the accused were not in any way prejudiced and the sentences were not in a legal case. *QUEEN EMPRESS v. under s 498 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) with having enticed away a married woman and under s 497 with having committed adultery. The woman alleged to have been enticed away resided in Bombay but the alleged adultery took place at Khandala outside the jurisdiction. At the enquiry before the Magistrate in Bombay objection was taken as to his jurisdiction with regard to the charge of adultery. The Magistrate however overruled the objections and committed the accused for trial. At the trial an application was made on behalf of the accused under s 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 188-) that the commitment should be quashed and a fresh enquiry directed on the ground that an objection had been taken to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Held refusing the application that the commitment being an order (see Queen Empress v. Thake I L R. 8 Bom. 319) under s 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code the commitment should not be quashed unless a failure of justice would be procured by proceeding with the trial. *QUEEN EMPRESS v. 64. *Irregularity in commitment—Criminal Procedure Code (1882) ss 532 and 537—Commitment to Sessions Court by Magistrate having no jurisdiction over place where alleged offence was committed—*A Magistrate who commits a case for trial by a Sessions Court does so in the exercise of powers duly conferred upon him and the fact that he had no territorial jurisdiction over the place where the alleged offence was committed and that an objection to the commitment on this ground was taken before the commitment is no ground for the Court to which the commitment is made quashing it under s 532 nor under s 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. *Queen Empress v. 65. *Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil litigation—Civil Procedure Code (1882) s 278—Inquiry into claim to attached property—Subsequent civil suit by claimant to establish his right to the property—Criminal Procedure Code (1882) s 479—*It is not an invariable rule that criminal proceedings should be stayed during the pendency of civil litigation regarding the same subject-matter. Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No. 1 applied to have the attachment raised on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry which was made under s 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 188-) he produced the sale-deed and accused No. 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was a forgery and rejected the claim. Proceeding then under s 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1892) he held the inquiry directed by that section and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. During the pendency of the inquiry under s 478 the accused No. 1 filed a civil suit to establish the genuineness of the said-deed and set aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings, pending the disposal of the civil suit. Held refusing the application that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit. 1422 DEVI VALAB BHAYAT

68 ————— Power of the High Court to stay proceedings before Magistrate pending a civil suit—Per RAMPINI J.—The High Court has no power to direct that criminal proceedings in the Court of a Magistrate should be stayed until the disposal of a civil suit in which the question at issue in the criminal proceedings shall have been decided. In the matter of Ram Lal and Har Lal B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 426 followed. It is very doubtful if the High Court has any power to pass an order quashing the proceedings before a Magistrate. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly authorizes the High Court to quash pending proceedings. Per GHOSH J.—A proceeding in a criminal Court should not be a general rule be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit in regard to the same subject matter but ordinarily it is not desirable if the parties to the two proceedings are substantially the same and the prosecution is but a private prosecution, and the issues in the two Courts are substantially identical that both the cases should go on at one and the same time. It is open to the Magistrate having regard to the facts of the case before him to consider whether it is not desirable that the proceedings in his Court should be stayed till the decision of the civil suit or for a limited period of time and it is also open to him to put the defendant on terms as to appearance or otherwise if he does stay proceedings. The High Court has the power to order a Magistrate to stay proceedings in his Court if a sufficient cause in that behalf is made out. But inasmuch as the Legislature has given him the power to regulate the proceedings in his own Court the direction should ordinarily be left to him either to stay proceedings or not as he in the circumstances of each case may think right and proper. RAJ KUMARI DEBI & JAMA SUNDARI DEBI

One of the accused had made a confessional statement before the Magistrate who recorded it but did not make on it a memorandum to the effect stated in Criminal Procedure Code s. 161 and did not admit it in evidence for the reasons that the accused was produced from the custody of the police in which he had been detained for five days and there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat him as an approver. It appeared that a perusal of the preliminary register would have shown that the accused were either guilty under s. 396 or not guilty under s. 396 at all. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge with a jury. The confessional statement was not admitted in evidence. The jury found the accused not guilty of dacoity but the Judge disagreeing with the verdict referred the case to the High Court under Criminal Procedure Code s. 307. Held (1) that the procedure adopted by the Judge was wrong and that he should have tried the accused with the aid of assessors under Indian Penal Code s. 596; (2) that the Judge should have enquired under Criminal Procedure Code s. 533 whether the confessional statement had been duly made and (3) that under the circumstances the High Court should determine on the evidence in record after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury whether the accused were guilty under s. 395. QUEEN & OTHERS & ANNA VALATIAN

Neither Court found specifically what was the intention with which the accused entered the room but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the women. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s. 446. It was contended that as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence the conviction was illegal. Held that the facts proved were good evidence of an intent and of an intrusion upon privacy within the meaning of s. 509 of the Penal Code and that therefore the intent to commit an offence within the meaning of s. 441 was made out. BALMAKAND RAM v GRAMSABAM I L R. 22 Calc 391 followed. PREMANANDU BRAHA v BRIVANATH CHENG I L R. 22 Calc 694

1. Provocation—Beat ag—Deliberation.—A person who beats another brutally and continuously so that death results is guilty of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder according as there may or may not have been grave provocation. QUEEN v. TEFRA FAKESB
[5 W. R. Cr. 78]

2. Penal Code s. 300
—Culpable homicide though committed under provocation will amount to murder unless it is proved not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his actions, but that that feeling had an adequate cause. QUEEN v. HARI GIRI
[I. L. R. A. Cr. 11 10 W. R. Cr. 28]

3. Grave and sudden provocation—Murder—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder is when a man kills another on being deprived of self control by reason of grave and sudden provocation. But when the act is done after the first excitement had passed away and there was time to cool it is murder. QUEEN v. YALV SHANKER
[4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 6 12 W. R., Cr., 68]

4. Penal Code s. 300
—The provocation contemplated by s. 300 of the Penal Code should be of a character to deprive the offender of his self control. In determining whether it was so it is admissible to take into account the condition of mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation. EXPRESS v. KHOGAYI
[I. L. R., 2 Mad. 122]

5. Sudden provocation—Penal Code s. 300 except 1.—To enable a person to plead the extenuating circumstances provided for in s. 300 Penal Code except 1 the provocation and its effects must be sudden as well as grave and

the deprivation of the power of self control must continue in order to benefit a man who kills another under circumstances of grave provocation QUEEN v BECHOO SAOUT 10 W R, Cr, 35

6 Grave provocation—Interval between provocation and attack—Where a man suddenly cut his wife's throat it was held that in order to establish that the act was not done under grave provocation so as to bring the case under excep 1 of s. 300 of the Penal Code it is not sufficient to state that the deceased ceased abusing the prisoner then but it is necessary to show what interval elapsed between the time when the deceased ceased to speak and the instant when the prisoner attacked her. The offence in this case held to be culpable homicide QUEEN v NOKU DUSIRO [7 W R, Cr 72

7 Sudden fight—Where it appeared in the case of a person charged with murder that while smarting from a severe blow from a stick in the midst of a sudden fight and possibly apprehensive of future violence finding a knife at hand he took it up and in the melee inflicted the wound which caused the death of the deceased—Held that under the circumstances the accused was guilty under the Penal Code s 304 of culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v SOMIRUDDIN [24 W R, Cr 48

8 Hasty and fatal blow—The prisoner having struck the deceased a hasty but fatal blow with a stick in his hand at the time for abusing his mother was held guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v SULEMAN 1 W R, Cr 23

9 Grave provocation—The prisoners found the deceased lying in the same bed with their sister and ill treated him from the effects of which ill treatment he died. Held that the provocation was sufficiently grave to justify a conviction of culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v HASSEEMODDEEN [4 W R, Cr 38

QUEEN v MAITHYA GAZER 5 W R, Cr 42

10 Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) s 303—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Grave and sudden provocation—A person accused of murder under s 302 of the Penal Code pleaded in defence that he had found his sister having illicit connection with a man named Thakur and had in a fit of passion killed them both on the spot. The statement being accepted was held to be a good plea of grave and sudden provocation so as to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v EMPRESS v CHUNNI I L R, 18 All 497

11 Grave provocation—Husband finding wife in adultery—Two prisoners confessed that having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them they then and there killed him. Held that the grave provocation given reduced the crime

from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v GORE CHAND POLLE [1 W R, Cr 17

12 Grave provocation—Husband finding wife in adultery—Where a prisoner confessed that he did not suspect his wife's fidelity; that he left home on business that on his return he saw what convinced him of his wife's infidelity; and that maddened at the sight he killed both her and her paramour—Held that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and that the case was one in which he ought to be treated with lenity QUEEN v BOODHO [6 W R, Cr 38

13 Grave provocation—Husband seeing wife seduced to adultery—The wife of the prisoner had been forcibly taken to the house of the deceased a native physician who alleged that her presence was necessary to the due performance of certain incantations. The prisoner armed with a sword and watching from the roof of the house saw his wife being actually violated by the deceased. He jumped down from the roof and struck deceased with his sword in several places from the effects of which he died. Held that the prisoner's conviction for murder could not be sustained. The offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v RAMTANAL KAHAR [3 B L R, A Cr 38

14 Grave provocation—Husband seeing wife in adultery—Deliberation—On a certain evening M a common workman saw N committing adultery with his (M's) wife and on the following morning while labouring under the excitement provoked by their misconduct came upon them eating food together while his wife had neglected to provide food for M. M took up a bill hook and killed N on the spot. Held that if M connected the subsequent conduct of N and his wife with their misconduct on the preceding evening and regarded it as implying an open avowal of their criminal relations which under the circumstances he might have done the provocation was sufficiently grave and sudden to deprive him of self control and to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder BOYA MUNIGANDU v QUEEN [1 L R, 3 Mad. 33

15 Right of private defence—Penal Code ss 97 99 and 104—When the accused whose property had frequently been stolen went out with a latee to watch his property and with the latee struck a thief who died from the effects of the blows it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s 99 and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder but was protected by ss 97 and 101 of the Penal Code and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property QUEEN v MOORE 12 W R, Cr 15

16 Search by police for stolen property—Apprehended violence—A head constable making an investigation into a case of

house breaking and theft searched the tents of certain gipsies for the stolen property but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money which he accepted but at the same time not deeming it sufficient he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give any thing more on the ground that they were poor and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates proceeding to execute such order all the gipsies in the camp, men, women and children, turned out a mob of four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones, and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place where such gipsy was being bound and the head constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies, the head constable fired with a gun at such crowd, when it was about five paces from him and killed one of the gipsies and having done so ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested and withdrawn him and his subordinates or had he effected his escape. Held that such head constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be their consequence and such head constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder. EXPRESS OF INDIA v. ABDUL HAKIM I L R 3 All. 253

17 — Killing outlaw while endeavouring to escape—Penal Code s 300 except 3—The prisoner, fearful of being punished if they allowed him to escape, and thinking that they were acting lawfully in furtherance of a plan arranged for them by a police constable and the lumberdar of a village for the capture of an outlaw for whose arrest a reward had been offered and in pursuance thereof killed him while endeavouring to escape. Held that the offence committed came under the third exception in s 300 of the Penal Code and was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. AMAN (5 N W 130)

18 — Unpremeditated assault—Penal Code s 300 except 4—An unpremeditated assault ending in an affray in which death is caused committed in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel comes within except 4 of s 300 of the Penal Code. It is immaterial which party offered the provocation or committed the first assault. QUEEN v. ZALIM RAI I W R Cr 33

19 — Inflicting injury not sufficient to cause death—Want of intention to cause death—Penal Code ss 299-300—Where the prisoner knocked his wife down, put one knee on her chest and struck her two or three violent blows on the face with the closed fist, producing extravasation of blood on the brain and she died in consequence either on the spot or very shortly afterwards. Held that there being no intention to cause death and the bodily injury not being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death the offence committed by the prisoner was not murder but culpable homicide not amounting to murder. PRO v. GOVINDA [I L R, 1 Bom 343]

20 — Grievous hurt—Blow causing injury not intended—An accused struck a woman carrying an infant in her arms violently over head and shoulders. One of the blows fell on the child's head causing death. Held that the accused was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder but had committed hurt on the infant under circumstances of sufficient aggravation to bring the offence within the definition of grievous hurt. EXPRESS v. [I L R 3 Cal 623 20 L R 304]

21 — Death from violent attack—Where death has resulted from a violent attack the Magistrate is bound to commit to the Court of Session on a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Conviction of grievous hurt in such a case is contrary to law. IN THE MATTER OF GORI DATH SHARMA 1 C L R 141

22 — Consenting to act likely to cause death—Murder—Penal Code s 300 except 5—Except 5 to s 300 refers to cases where a man consents to submit to the doing of some particular act either knowing that it will certainly cause death or that death will be the likely result but it does not refer to the running of a risk of death from something which a man intends to avert if he possibly can do so even by causing the death of the person from whom the danger is to be anticipated. PER BRONKHORST v. 23 — Riot—Unlawful assembly—Fight between two contending factions each armed with deadly weapons—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) s 300 except 6—Where death results in a fight between two bodies of men deliberately fighting together a greater proportion of the men composing both sides being armed with deadly weapons and it being further apparent from the evidence that the man slain was an adult and that no unfair advantage was taken by the one side or the other during the fight the offence committed is culpable homicide but does not amount to murder. SAMSHER KHAN v. 24 — Penal Code s 300 cl 5 and ss 149 and 307—Murder Attempt to commit—Rioting armed with deadly weapons—Pre arranged fight—In a case in which it was found that all the accused were guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons that the fight was premeditated and pre arranged a regular pitched battle or trial of strength between the two parties concerned in the riot and that one of the accused in the course of the riot and in prosecution of the common object of the assembly killed or attempted to kill a man under such circumstances that his act

amounted to an attempt to murder the question arose whether that act could be said to bear a less grave character by reason of except. 5 to s 300 of the Indian Penal Code Per Curiam—Held that upon such finding the case did not fall within the exception Per LIGOR J (PETHERAM CJ and MACRABSON J concurring)—The 5th exception to s 300 should receive a strict and not a liberal construction and in applying the exception it should be considered with reference to the act consented to or authorized and next with reference to the person or persons authorized and as to each of those some degree of particularity at least should appear upon the facts proved before the exception can be said to apply Shamshere Khan v Empress I L R 6 Cal 154 and Queen v Kukier Mather unreported dissented from so far as they decide that from such a finding as the above consent to take the risk of death is inferred. Per O'KEEFE J—Before except 5 can be applied it must be found that the person killed with a full knowledge of the facts determined to suffer death or take the risk of death; and that this determination continued up to and existed at the moment of his death Queen v Kukier Mather unreported observed on Per GROSS J—No general rule of law can be laid down in determining in cases of this description whether the person killed or wounded suffered death or took the risk of death with his own consent it being a question of fact and not of law to be decided upon the circumstances of each case as it arises. Shamshere Khan v Empress I L R 6 Cal. 154 and Queen v Kukier Mather unreported observed on and the propositions of law laid down therein concurred with. QUEEN EMPRESS v DATAMUDDIN I L R 18 Cal. 484

25 ——— Subjecting person of full age to emasculation—When a man of full age (i.e. above 18 years) submits himself to emasculation performed neither by a skilful hand nor in the least dangerous way and dies from the injury the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder QUEEN v BANOOLUN HIZBAN S W R Cr. 7

26 ——— Knowledge of likelihood to cause death—Pre-meditation—Where a person snatches up a log of heavy wood and strikes another with it on a vital part with so much force and vindictiveness as to cause that other person's death almost on the spot the act must be held to have been done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death but if done without pre-meditation in the heat of passion on a sudden quarrel, the offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v PAJOO GHOSH 7 W R. Cr 108

27 ——— Taking persons on old boat—Negligence—Penal Code s 299—Certain persons whom the accused a ferryman was rowing across a river were drowned by the sinking of the boat which was an old one with holes in it over which planks had been nailed. Held that the prisoner could not be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder unless it could be shown

that he acted with the knowledge that he was likely by taking them in the boat to cause death within the terms of s 299 of the Penal Code QUEEN v MAGEVER BHARA II W R Cr. 3

28 ——— The knowledge that an act is likely to cause death does not constitute culpable homicide amounting to murder. It must be shown that the act was committed with the knowledge that it must in all probability cause death. QUEEN v GIRDHAREE SING II W R 28

29 ——— Act likely to cause death—Penal Code ss 301 and 301 (a)—Assault on thief—The prisoners assaulted a thief so severely that he died. One hundred and forty one marks of separate blows were found on the body of the deceased and several of his ribs were broken. Held that s 301 (a) of the Penal Code was not applicable to the circumstances of the case and that taking the offence out of the category of murder it must still come under s 304 QUEEN v MAN II W R 335

30 ——— Causing death by branding a thief—Dangerous act—Causing death by branding a thief without the knowledge that the act was imminently dangerous that it would in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death is punishable under a 304 of the Penal Code as culpable homicide not amounting to murder QUEEN v KUNDU MISSE 7 W R. Cr 54

31 ——— Penal Code s 301 (a)—Administering milk to child in such quantity as to kill it—Rash and negligent act—Knowledge of consequences—Where there was medical evidence to show that milk had been administered to a child in such quantities as to kill it but there was no evidence to show that the milk was administered by the orders of the mother or that she knew the quantity that was being administered—Held that there was not sufficient evidence to bring her within s 301 (a) of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge found that the mother could not have been ignorant of the fact that her child was being over-fed or of the probable consequences of such over-feeding; such feeding was inconsistent with the terms of a 301 (a) which provides for the causing of death by any rash or negligent act not amounting to murder. What a man does with the knowledge that the consequences will be likely to cause death cannot be reduced to a simply rash and negligent act. QUEEN v PRINCE 5 N W 38

32 ——— Intent on to cause injury likely to result in death—Causing death by rash act—Culpable rashness—Culpable negligence—Prisoner killed his mother by beating and kicking her. The Sessions Judge found that the death resulted from brutal beating and kicking but acquitted of culpable homicide because the violence was not such as the prisoner must have known to be likely to cause death. Held that this was no ground for acquitting of culpable homicide not amounting to murder; the question for the Judge was whether the act was done with the intention of causing bodily injury which was likely to cause death. The Sessions

Judge convicted the prisoner on the charge of causing death by a rash act. Held that the offence was wholly inapplicable. Culpable rashness and "culpable negligence" distinguished. QUEEN v. NIDAMARTI NAGABHUTANAYAM 7 Mad. 119

33—Penal Code ss 299 304 and 323—Voluntarily causing hurt—Spleen disease—Where a person hurt another who was suffering from spleen disease intentionally but without the intention of causing death or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death as by his act caused the death of such other person—Held that he was not guilty of culpable homicide and properly convicted under s 323 of the Penal Code of voluntarily causing hurt. EMPERESS OF INDIA v. FOX I L R. 3 All. 522

34—Penal Code ss 304 325—Voluntarily causing hurt—Causing death by negligence—Spleen disease—B voluntarily caused hurt to A who was suffering from spleen disease knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt but without the intention of causing death or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, and caused grievous hurt to A from which A died. Held that B ought not to be convicted under s 304 (a) of the Penal Code of causing death by negligence but under s 325 of that Code of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. *EMPERESS v. 38—*Penal Code ss 336 337 and 338—Rashness—Negligence—s 304 (a) of the Penal Code does not apply to a case in which there has been the voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result and if such knowledge can be imputed the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts, probably or possibly involving danger to others but which in the circumstances are not offences may be offences under s 336 337 338 or 304 (a) if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to the knowledge or means of knowledge of the offender and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character. *EMPERESS v. 10. — Appointment of Guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) ss 9 and 17—Application by a Christian father to be appointed guardian of his Hindu minor son—Matters to be considered by the Court in appointing guardian—A who was originally a Hindu but afterwards became a Christian and abandoned his family residence applied to be the guardian of the person of his minor son. On the objections of the paternal and maternal uncles of the boy that under the circumstances of the case the father was not fit and proper person to be appointed the guardian of the minor.—Held although the father is prima facie entitled to the custody of his infant child, he can be deprived of such parental right if the circumstances justify it therefore in a case where a child who was brought up as a Hindu and who expressed a desire to remain a Hindu and was living with his Hindu relation who was maintaining him and was looking after his education properly it would not be to the welfare of the child that he should be handed over to the father and brought up in the Christian faith and that the Court below under the circumstances of the case was right in dismissing the application. MOKOOND LAL SINGH & NARODIP CHANDER SINGHA

A married man a Christian came to live with her mother and in order to legalize their intercourse he and the mother became Mahomedans, and were married in Mahomedan form. About three years after when the child had attained the age of fourteen, some of her relatives applied for an order under Act IX of 1861 that the girl be removed from the guardianship of the mother and her second husband and placed under a Christian guardian. The girl deposed that she wished to remain with her mother and to become a Mahomedan. Held by the High Court in granting the application and appointing a guardian in place of her mother that a Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction under the Act is justified in having respect to the religious professed by the father of a minor and in passing such orders with regard to the custody of the person of such minor as he may hold to be in accordance with what would have been the minor's father's wishes had he been alive to express them. in Broach—Inheritance—Special custom—Priority of nearer male relative to daughter or a sister—The plaintiff as heir of her father (a deceased Hindu bagdari) sued the sons of sisters of her father's paternal uncle for possession of certain bagdari lands situate in a village in the Broach collectorate. The defendants pleaded that they were entitled to the property under a special custom regulating the succession to bagdari lands in the collectorate of Broach under which custom on the death of a bharidar whether Hindu or Mahomedan without male issue his nearest male relations (after the death of a widow) whether sprung through male or female relatives of the deceased bagdari succeeded to his bagdari lands to the exclusion of his daughter or wife. It was held that the custom alleged was sufficiently proved and that the defendants were entitled to possession of the bagdari lands in question. Custom—The custom alleged being, if not universal, at least general in the Broach collectorate it was held in the case of any particular village as to its evidence being given of its continuance in it.

The Courts having decreed the suit on vague and flimsy evidence as to the existence of the said rights—Held (a) that where a custom regarding cesses is alleged the existence of the custom each cess should be tried as a separate issue. (b) that partial evidence as to the existence of such a custom could be tested by ascertaining the grounds of a witness's opinion. 32 Pre-emption—Wajib ul-ur—Held that occasional instances in which a claim to pre-emption on the ground of vicinage may have been admitted or for special reason the vendors submitted to the claim are not sufficient to prove the custom of pre-emption in a mahallah but repeated instances of the assertion of pre-emption as a right and of its recognition or enforcement ranging over a long period of time and in various places should be shown. SHEO CHURN KANDOO v. When necessary one or two bighas out of the tenants lands are taken with their consent (ba khushi) for sowing indigo. Upon the basis of this entry they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy holding at a certain period of the year for the purpose of cultivating indigo. Held by the Full Bench that the word khushi used in the wajib ul-ur indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy tenant's consent and the document created no right of the nature alleged namely to take the land despite the tenant. ANANDARAY v. 35 Pre-emption—Wajib ul-ur—Evidence of contract and custom—Act XIX of 1873 s. 91—Beng. Reg. VII of 1882 s. 9 cl. (1)—The wajib ul-ur of a village is a document of a public character prepared with all publicity and must be considered as prima facie evidence of the existence of any custom which it records. Its record of the existence of a custom of pre-emption is sufficiently strong evidence to cast on those denying the custom the burden of proof and in the same manner when it records a contract of pre-emption between the shareholders there is a presumption that it is binding on the shareholders. Looking to the public character of the document and the way it is prepared, and that all shareholders whether shareholders or not must be presumed to have assented to its terms the inferences to be deduced from it cannot be disregarded except when they are rebutted by evidence of an opposite character. A suit to enforce of pre-emption which was based on contract and custom as evidenced by the wajab ul urz of a village, was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that any contract which might be founded on the wajab ul urz was not binding on the vendor defendant as that document did not bear his signature and the lower Appellate Court attached no weight to the wajab ul urz as proof of the custom of pre-emption because it was drawn up when Regulation VII of 1822 was in force and at that time there was no legal presumption of its accuracy. The claim was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff's evidence did not prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village. Held that the lower Appellate Court had erred in dealing with the evidence and that although this particular wajab ul urz was made before Act XIX of 1873 came into force yet the weight which would attach to its entries both as proof of the contract as well of custom was very strong. Ism Singh v Ganga I L R 2 All 676, referred to MUHAMMAD HASAN v MUHAMMAD I L R, 8 All, 434

36 ————— Wajab ul urz—Mahomedan law—It having been alleged that an estate by custom descended to a single heir in the male line the High Court concurring with the Court of first instance found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding it was argued among other objections that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajab ul urz of a zamindari village the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute the last owner of that estate who held all the shares in the village having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir the others of the family being maintained. Held that though termed an entry in a wajab ul urz the document was not entitled to the name but was rather in the nature of a testamentary attempt to make a disposition contrary to the Mahomedan law of descent. MOHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN v FIDAYAT UN NISSA

40 ————— Dharchhura—Beng Reg XI of 1825 as 24(11)—The question whether the custom of dharchhura applies to lands gained by gradual accretion only, or also to lands which have been separated from a mouzah by a sudden change of stream must be determined in each case on the evidence; for although the Court would be disposed to scrutinize with care evidence in regard to a custom which would have the effect of passing from one owner to another lands long held and enjoyed and of which the character is in no way altered by river action yet it cannot be said that such a custom can in no case be established and given effect to. Katigavee v Mahomed Shurfooden 3 Agra 189 *Ism Singh v Shurfooden 1 N. 44 ————— Customary right of privacy—Right of building and to interfere with erection of building—A customary right of privacy under certain conditions exists in India and in the North Western Provinces and is not unreasonable but merely an application of the maxims sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas and ocius facere in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. In the case of a building for parda purposes newly erected without the acquiescence of the owner of an adjacent building as a custom preventing such owner from so building as to interfere with the privacy of the first new building would be unreasonable and consequently bad in law. But if such adjacent owner without protest or notice allowed his neighbour to erect and consequently to incur expenses in connection with a building for the use of parda-nashin women a custom preventing him from interfering with the privacy of such new building would not

45. — Customary right
— Facts necessary to establish the existence of a customary right—Easement—Easement Act as to and IS.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a piece of land which, he alleged, formed part of the courtyard of his kothi and for demolition of a chabutra thereon. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title and alleged that they always used the chabutra as a sitting place and that during the Moharram the tatas and almas were exhibited upon the chabutra, and a takht was placed upon it. The Court of first instance found that the defendants had a right to use the land in the manner claimed during the Moharram. The lower Appellate Court, on the question of the defendant's right to use the said land in the manner claimed by them found as follows:—That various mirads, whose connection with each other is not established, have within a period of twenty years or so placed tatas upon land and sung there. Held that this finding of fact did not necessarily in law lead to the conclusion that there was a local custom by virtue of which the easement now claimed by the defendants was acquired. Where a local custom excluding or limiting the general rule of law is set up a Court should not decide that it exists unless such Court is satisfied of its reasonableness, and its certainty as to extent and application and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or by force and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned KUAN SEN v. — Local custom—Right to bury a corpse in a locality—Right of burial.—Where a certain sect of the Mahomedan community had been for many years in the habit of burying their dead near a dargah in plaintiff's land, and the plaintiff sought to restrain them from exercising this right in future. Held that the right of burial claimed by the defendants was not an easement but a customary right, which, being confined to a limit of cases of necessity and a limited area of land was sufficiently certain and reasonable to be recognized as a valid local custom. MOHIDEEN v. under the provisions of the law comes under the charge and control of the Court of Wards. The view taken by the Courts of the Regulation and Arts concerned with the Courts of Wards in Bengal is, that although the possession of a revenue-paying property is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards attaching yet when once that jurisdiction has attached, all the property of the ward comes under the control and management of the Court. Mahomed Zakoer Ali Khan v Ruffa Koer II Moore's I A, 478 considered. DIRECTOR SIKON v SROODHARA LAKARI

10 — Disqualification to contract—Beng Reg LII of 1803.—On a consideration of the provisions of Regulation LII of 1803 (the provisions of Regulation X of 1793 are similar) it was held that the mere fact that the Court of Wards has charge of the estates of a female did not necessarily disqualify her from contracting debts. That Regulation must be construed strictly the provisions requiring the Collector to report to the Board a female as disqualified, and the subsequent procedure thereon should be strictly carried out as not mere matters of form but necessary preliminaries before the female can be considered disqualified. From the absence of the observance of those provisions in the case of R A and the conduct of the Government officials representing the Court of Wards the custody of the Court of Wards of her estates was held to be of such a character as did not render her a disqualified female incapable of contracting debts. The case having been framed incorrectly it was under the circumstances, remanded for trial by the High Court under special directions. MAHOMED ZAKOOR ALI KHAN v RUFFA KOER

[8 W R., P O 9 II Moore's I A., 478]

11 — Beng Reg LII of 1803—Incompetency of disqualified proprietor to contract.—Under s 7 of Regulation LII of 1803 Iakhurs lands belonging to a disqualified proprietor may be committed by the Government (on its appearing that this will be for its interests and those of such proprietor) to the charge of the Court of Wards; and thereupon the whole estate and effects real and personal of such proprietor become vested in that Court. An estate consisting of Iakhurs lands was duly placed under the management of the Court of Wards the proprietress a Mahomedan being disqualified under the Regulation. This ward having then become a party to a mortgage of such lands to secure repayment of money advanced to her it was held that she neither bound herself nor charged the estate. This case distinguished from Mohammed Zakoer Ali Khan v Ruffa Koer II Moore's I A 478; where the proprietress no intention to treat her as disqualified having been shown was adjudged capable of contracting though the Court of Wards was in possession of her estate. On the facts of this case it was also held that although the Court had given to this ward an authority under certain limitations of which the plaintiff had notice to borrow money for a special purpose there had not been such a holding out to the world of her competency as would have induced any

12 — Beng Reg LII of 1803 s 5—Disqualified proprietor—Necessity of following procedural steps necessary to taking estate under the Court of Wards.—The procedure prescribed by Regulation No LII of 1803 for disqualifying proprietors and taking their estates under the Court of Wards must be strictly followed in order that the disabilities incident to the status of a disqualified proprietor may ensue. Mohammed Zakoer Ali Khan v Ruffa Koer II Moore's I A 478 referred to. the hands of the Collector as manager of the Court of Wards on the allegations that she had placed the property in the hands of the Court some years previously, because she was not at that time in a position to manage it herself but that she was now capable of managing it and desired to get it back. The suit was dismissed and the plaintiff appealed on the ground inter alia that inasmuch as she was not a disqualified proprietor within the meaning of Act XIX of 1873 (North West Provinces Land Revenue Act) the Court of Wards had no jurisdiction to take the property and that its possession was merely the result of an arrangement to which she was a consenting party and which she now desired to terminate. Held that with reference to the provisions of Act XIX of 1873 and Act VIII of 1879 (North West Provinces Land Revenue Acts) the suit as brought was not maintainable inasmuch as there was no evidence that the plaintiff had obtained the previous sanction of the local Government to the release of the property from the superintendence of the Court of Wards as required by s 20 of the latter Act. Held also that the plaintiff could not be allowed in appeal entirely to change the nature of the grounds upon which she alleged herself to be entitled to claim relief and that hence she could not now raise the plea that the Court of Wards in taking the property under its management had acted without jurisdiction. The expression "local Government" in ss 191 and 195 of Act XIX of 1873 and s 20 of Act VIII of 1879 means the Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces. MASMA BIBI v. COLLECTOR OF BALLIA I. Before sanction of the Lieutenant Governor could be obtained under Bengal Act IV of 1870 s 74 B died and the sanction was subsequently refused on the ground of B's death. On application made under Act XXVII of 1860 the Judge on 28th March 1871 found the adoption good and appointed one P to be guardian of the minor D and directed the estate to be placed under the management of the Court of Wards. If a judgment creditor of J's failing to execute his decree against the estate of B brought a suit to have it declared that B as heir had inherited all B's property and that he as J was entitled to have that property attached and sold in satisfaction of his decree. The only defendant was A, the manager under the Court of Wards, and the Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree declaring that B was not the legally adopted son of B. This was appealed from. Held that the

Judge had no power to make any such order as that of the 28th March 1871 in regard to the Court of Wards. What he had power to do under Act XL of 1858 s 12 was to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate and it would then have become the duty of the Collector to appoint a manager and a guardian in the same manner etc. as if the minor's property and person were subject to the Court of Wards. Held that the minor's interests were not properly represented before the Subordinate Judge whose decree therefore could not stand so as to affect the minor and that the minor must be made a party strictly in the manner prescribed by Bengal Act IV of 1870, s 69. *ABDOOL HYE v. ——— s 20 and ss 51-55—Suit—Application for execution by Collector on behalf of ward when manager of ward's estate has been appointed—The word suit as used in ss 51 to 55 of Bengal Act IX of 1870 is not limited to what is usually called a regular suit but covers miscellaneous proceedings in a suit such as an application for execution of a decree in which the ward for the first time seeks to have the carriage of litigation instituted by his predecessor in title. When it appeared that a manager of a minor's property had been appointed by the Court of Wards under the provisions of s 20 of Bengal Act IX of 1870 and during the absence of such manager on leave an application was made on behalf of the minor by the Collector of the district for execution of a decree—Held that the office of manager did not become vacant because the manager obtained leave and that if it were not vacant, s 51 of the Act did not enable the Collector to appear on behalf of the minor. *SHOORUDDO AARAF DUTT v. A suit was instituted in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Darca on behalf of a ward by his manager without the order or sanction of the Court of Wards and proceeded to judgment without any such order or sanction. The suit was partially decreed; and the manager appealed to the District Judge for that portion of the claim which had been dismissed by the Court of first instance. At the hearing of the appeal an application was filed on behalf of the appellant accompanied by a letter giving sanction to the institution of the suit, the appeal and other proceedings connected therewith, with retrospective effect from the date of its institution. The Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held having regard to s. 55 of the Court of Wards Act, 1879 as amended by s. 7 of Bengal Act III of 1881 the lower Appellate Court was right in dismissing the suit. Held also that the sanction given after appeal did not have a retrospective effect. DINESH CHUNDER ROY v. Accordingly in a suit for setting aside a summary attachment under Bombay Act I of 1865 placed by the Collector on land held on a settlement for a period not exceeding thirty years the value was held to be five times the assessment and the stamp duty calculated upon it irrespective of the actual market value or the amount for which the land was attached. COLLECTOR OF THANA v. 5 — and a 12—Finality of taxing officer's decision as to Court fee—Meaning of—Duty of Court Fees Act officer — The word "final" in s. 5 of the Court Fees Act has the same meaning as in s. 1st though it is applied to a different subject. The cases in which it has been held that notwithstanding the use of this word in s. 1 an appeal lies from a decision as to the category in which the relief sought by a plaintiff or appellant falls do not mean that decisions which the section declares to be final are nevertheless appealable but that the question of category is a question relating to valuation and therefore is not declared by the section to be final. In s. 5 s. 6 and a 12 final is used in its ordinary legal sense of unappealable. A decision under s. 5 of the Act is not open to appeal, revision or review and is final for all purposes and no man is allowed questioning it. The officer mentioned in s. 5 of the Court Fees Act is not bound to advise parties as to the stamp required under the Act or to give them notices that they have not sufficiently stamped documents which the Act requires to be stamped before presentation. BALKRISHN RAI v. On appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing his suit the lower Appellate Court demanded from the plaintiff Court fees in respect of his plaint and memorandum of appeal computed on the market value of such house the plaintiff having only paid in respect of those documents respectively the Court fees payable in a suit for a declaration of right where no consequential relief was prayed. Held that the market value of the property could not be taken by the lower Appellate Court to be the value of the relief sought by the plaintiff but to be the value of the property and that as the plaintiff did not seek possession of the property and that as the valuation of the relief sought was set with the plaintiff and not the Court and as in this instance the declaration of right claimed necessarily carried with it the consequential relief sought of which the value was merely nominal further Court fees could

12. — Stamp—Construction and applicability of the proviso—Valuation of suits for land in a talukdars' villages—Talukdars' jumma—Remission—Per WISE and NANABHAI JJ—The proviso to art 11 of s 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) was clearly intended to provide a standard of valuation in the Bombay Presidency not only for the comparatively rare case of land forming part but not a definite share of an estate paying revenue to Government but for all cases of suits for land. The theory being that all land is primarily liable to be rated or taxed for the public revenue any sum not levied according to the apportionment made in order to show the proper amount of the land tax may be regarded as a remission. In the case of a talukhdar village the proprietor of which had under a settlement with Government for a period of twenty two years agreed to pay a fixed annual jumma or lump assessment instead of the full survey assessment for the whole village. Held by a majority of the Full Bench that the difference in amount between the jumma and the full survey assessment was a remission and therefore a suit for possession of lands in this village was to be valued according to cl 11 of the proviso to art 5 of s 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). Per Birdwood J.—The remission contemplated by cl (3) of the proviso is an express remission and not a mere difference in amount between the actual assessment payable by a talukhdar and the survey assessment. The three clauses of the proviso seem to apply only to lands which have been subjected to a survey settlement as ordinarily understood and legally provided for in the Bombay Presidency the first clause being applicable to lands settled for a period not exceeding thirty years the second to lands settled for a longer period or permanently and the third to lands on which the whole or a part of the survey assessment has been expressly remitted. The talukhdars are not inamdars. They are land holders liable to pay a land tax but not under a survey settlement such as is applicable to lands for which provision seems to have been specially made in the proviso to art 5 of s 7 of the Court Fees Act. No part of the proviso therefore applies to a suit for the possession of lands in a talukhdar village. Such a suit should be valued according to cl (d) of art 5 of s 7 of the Court Fees Act. ALA CHELA v. OGHAD BHAI THAKRESI. I. L. R. 11 Bom. 541.

s 7 cl 8—Suit to restore attachment—Civil Procedure Code 1859 s 246—Assump of Rs 10 is sufficient for the plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit brought under s 246 of Act VIII of 1859 to restore an attachment upon a house which has been removed at the instance of an intervenient under that section. A person who seizes property attached was not compelled to resort in the first instance to an application under s 246 of the late Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). There was nothing to prevent him from commencing his litigation by a regular suit if such were his pleasure. Cl 8 of s 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) would apply to such a suit. The language of that section is not limited to suits to set aside any special kind of attachments on land. It is large enough to include suits brought in pursuance of the permission given by s 246 of Act VIII of 1859 to set aside attachments on land, as well as other suits for that purpose brought independently of that section. The term

Order for payment of additional Court fees—Power of Court to enlarge time for payment—Held that it is competent to a Court which has made an order under s. 10 cl. ii. of Act VII of 1870 for the payment of an additional Court fee to enlarge either before or after its expiration, the time limited for the payment of such additional fee. Badrin Vora v Shree Koor I L.R., 1 Calcutta 519 L.E. 11 1 A. 1 and Bhagwandas Bagla v Abu Ahmed I L.R., 16 Bom., 263 referred to. CURRIE LAL v ANTHONIA I RASAD I L.R. 10 All., 230

4. — Court fee—Procedure.—Excess appeal—appeal to lower Appellate Court by respondent in High Court insufficiently stamped—Where it was dismissed in second appeal in the High Court that the respondent, when appellant in the lower Appellate Court had not paid a sufficient Court fee on his memorandum of appeal in that Court, and up to the date of the hearing of the appeal in the High Court, though called upon to do so, had not made good the deficiency. It was held that the proper procedure was not to dismiss the respondent's appeal in the lower Appellate Court under s. 10 of the Court Fees Act but to stay the issue, if the decree is any of the High Court in favour of the respondent until such time as the additional Court-fee due by him might be paid. VARAD FINCH v CHATTERJEE FINCH I L.R. 20 All., 362

5. — Order requiring additional Court fee on plea passed subsequent to decree—Decree prepared so as to give effect to subsequent order—Civil Procedure Code ss 21 50 541—Court Fees Act ss 12 and 29.—A Judge after disposing of an appeal on the 1st March 1893 again took it up and on the 21st March 1893 directed the appellant to pay additional Court-fees on his memorandum of appeal. On the 2nd May 1893 the appellant paid the additional Court-fee under protest, and a decree was then prepared bearing date the 1st March 1893 but it referred to and carried into effect the subsequent order of the 21st March and the 2nd May. Jaffer Mahomed J that as soon as the Judge had passed the decree of the 1st March 1893 he ceased to have any power over it and was not competent to introduce new matters not dealt with by the judgment; that the order of the 21st March and the disposal of the 2nd May whether right or wrong were not proceedings to which effect could be given in the antecedent decree of the 1st March 1893; and that the decree was ultra vires to that extent and was therefore liable to correction in second appeal under s. 584 of the Civil Procedure Code. The powers conferred by s. 54 (a) and (c) and s. 55 read with s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code or by s. 12 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) read with cl. (ii) of s. 10 are intended to be exercised before the disposal of the case and not after it has been decided finally so far as the Court is concerned.

The powers conferred by s. 23 of the Court Fees Act cannot be exercised by an order passed after the decision of the case to which the question of the payment of Court fees relates and even assuming that they can be so exercised, such an order though it may be subject to such rules as to appeal or revision as the law may provide cannot be given effect to by making insertions in an antecedent decree. See OLDFIELD J—That the Court had power to make the order it did inasmuch as the collection of Court fees was no part of a Judge's functions in the trial of a suit which could be said to have ceased with its determination; and the provisions of the Court Fees Act fixed no time within which the presiding Judge could exercise his power of ordering documents to be stamped and sealed, on the other hand, to contemplate the exercise of that power at any time subsequent to the receipt filing or use of a document, and to make the validity of the document and the proceedings relative thereto dependent on the document being properly stamped. MAHADEVI v RAM KISHEN DAS I L.R., 7 All., 528

6. — s. 11—Interest accruing on decree in suit for money lent.—The Court Fees Act (No. VII of 1870) s. 11 is not applicable to interest accruing upon a decree in a suit which is neither for money lent, nor for immovable property nor for an account but simply an action for money lent. KRISHNARAY v ASTAJI NAUTIKSHA

[13 Dom. 227]

7. — Execution of part of decree—Payment of full amount of Court fees not necessary for such part execution—Construction of Act—Court Fees Act s. 17.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a house and for mesne profits. In the main suit he also claimed certain account books and documents from the defendant. In paying Court fees he estimated the mesne profits at Rs 151 and paid on that amount. He obtained a decree and the amount of mesne profits awarded to him was Rs 313-13-3. The decree further directed that possession of the house should be given to him and that the books and documents should be handed over to him. He now applied for execution of that part of the decree which directed the delivery of the house and of the account books and other documents. The defendant contended that, under s. 11 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) the plaintiff was not entitled to execution of any part of the decree until he paid the proper Court fees on the sum awarded as mesne profits viz Rs 313-13-3. Held that the plaintiff might obtain execution of that part of the decree which ordered delivery of the house and books and documents without paying the fees payable on the amount awarded for mesne profits. s. 11 and s. 17 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) ought to be similarly construed; and the language of the latter section which deals with multifarious suits shows that for the purposes of the stamp revenue such suits are deemed to be a collection of distinct suits relating to the several causes of action combined in them. In applying s. 11 to such suits, in order to

—sch. I, art. 8.—Stamp Act 1879 s. 4 I art. 1.—Copies of originals returned to the party.—Inability of such copies to stamp duty.—In the course of a suit the plaintiff put in evidence certain entries from his day books and ledger. The books had been produced in Court and had been returned to the plaintiff as usual on his furnishing copies of the said entries. The Subordinate Judge feeling doubt as to whether such copies should be furnished on stamped paper referred the question to the High Court. Held that the original entries not having been in the handwriting of the debtor were not liable to stamp duty under sch. I art. 1 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879 and that therefore the copies of them were not chargeable with any Court fees under sch. I art. 8 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). HANICHAND & JYNA DEBHAYA [I L R., 11 Bom., 528]

4. Suits brought to set aside or restore attachment.—Civil Procedure Code 1859 s 246.—Summary decision.—Limitation Act 1871 art 15 (1877, art 13).—Interpretation of Acts.—Valuation of suits.—Suits brought to set aside or to restore an attachment upon a house in pursuance of the permission given in s 246 of the Civil Procedure Code may be regarded either as "suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed" so as to fall within a. 1 cl 4 art (c) of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) or as suits to obtain or set aside a summary decision or order in which case the stamp duty payable would be that prescribed by art 17 cl 1 sch II of the Court Fees Act. The Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment it is the duty of the Courts to treat such suits as belonging to the latter class (it being the more favourable for the suitors) and to impose fees accordingly. Decisions under s 246 of Act VIII of 1859 as to the removal or retention of attachments are summary decisions or orders within the meaning of art 17 cl 1 sch II of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). The words summary decision or order in this clause of the Court Fees Act mean decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal. The construction which has been given to these words or nearly similar words in the Limitation Acts (e.g. Act IX of 1871 sch II art 15 and Act XV of 1877 sch II art 13) affords no guide to their construction in the Court Fees Act. When Acts are in par materia they may be treated as forming a Code and may be read together; but when this is not so, the construction which has been put upon one cannot be relied upon as a guide to the construction of another. The valuation of suits for the purpose of jurisdiction is perfectly distinct from their valuation for the fiscal purpose of Court-fees. Therefore Court Fees Acts which are fiscal enactments are not to be resorted to for construing enactments which fix the valuation of suits for the purpose of determining jurisdiction. Mohamed Jauchand v Dadabhai Pestonjee 11 Bom. 186 explained. Parlaja Tamoy v Dholapa Raghu I L R. 4 Bom 123 dissented from by WESTROP C.J. ## COURT FEES ACT (VII OF 1870)

Fees Act 1870 s 7 cl 4 and s 17—A suit praying merely for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to require the defendants to account to him and to permit him to inspect their books is simply a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief and falls within art 17 cl 3 of sch II of Act VII of 1870. A suit praying for such a declaration as the above and also for a positive order in the nature of a mandatory injunction for the production of the defendants' books and property in their hands or a suit praying for such declaration as the above and also for a positive decree for an account to be taken by the Court and for the production of the books and property would range under s 7 cl 4 art (c) of Act VII of 1870 as being a suit to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed and also within art (d) of the same section as being a suit to obtain an injunction and a suit of the third species described above would fall under art (f) of the same clause as being a suit for accounts. Quere—Whether in the case of a suit for a declaration of the right of the plaintiff to an account and to inspection of the defendants' books and for a mandatory injunction for the production of those books or of a suit for such declaration and for a positive decree for the taking of an account by the Court and the production of the defendants' books the plaintiff would by virtue of s 17 of Act VII of 1870 require separate stamps under arts (d) and (f) of cl 4 s 7 or be sufficiently covered by the stamp under art (c) of the same clause and whether assuming the declaration and the account each to require a stamp the prayer for an injunction or order for the production of books is not merely ancillary to and not a distinct subject from the taking of an account. Quere—Whether the provision in s 7 cl 4 of Act VII of 1870 that the amount of the fee payable in suits falling within that clause shall be computed according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint is so inconsistent with that portion of s 31 of Act VIII of 189 which permits the Court receiving the plaint to revise the valuation of the claim as to render that portion of s 31 of Act VIII of 189 inoperative in suits within s 7 cl 4 of Act VII of 1870 notwithstanding the concluding passage in the clause. Quere—Whether the concluding passage in cl 4 s 7 of Act VII of 1870 is too express to admit of a limitation of the power of the Judge and leaves him the right to revise the valuation placed on suits and cl 4 by the plaintiff. But assuming this to be so it would generally not be advisable that the Judge should enhance the valuation on the reception of the plaint. The fee payable under s 7 cl 4 of Act VII of 1870 is according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint and not the value of the subject matter of the plaint. MAYORAN GAYSEN v BAWA RAM CHANDY DAS I. 19 — Master and servant—Servant entrusted with money for payment to tradesman of account settled with master for a specific sum—Gratuity of tradesman to servant—Right of master to benefit of gratuity—Act XIV of 1860 ss 403 409—When a master entrusts his servant with money for the payment of an open account i.e. an account of which the items have never been checked or settled and the tradesman makes the servant a present and the transaction amounts to a taxatio of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant, the latter obtains the reduction for his master's benefit the money in his hands always remains the master's property and if he appropriates it he commits criminal breach of trust. But where the master himself has settled the account with the tradesman for a specific sum and sends the servant with money and the servant after making the payment accepts a present from the tradesman in that case the servant does not commit criminal breach of trust inasmuch as the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it though it may be that according to the strict equitable doctrine of the Court of Chancery he is bound to account to the master for the money Hay's case In re Canadian Oil Works Corporation L. 20 — Penal Code s 408—Criminal breach of trust by a servant—Criminal misappropriation—An accused person who was in the service of zamindars and whose duty it was to pay into the Collectorate Government revenue due in respect of their estates, immediately before the due date of a list received from them a certain sum of money with no specific instruction as to its application. On receipt of that money he paid a portion only of it into the Collectorate on account of the revenue and having done so he then altered the chitallan given back to him showing the amount actually paid and made it appear that a much larger amount had been paid than was the fact. This chitallan he sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (amongst other offences) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered chitallan. The accused was convicted on all altered chitallans. It was contended that the charge under the Penal Code was not sustainable inasmuch as the money was not applied for the purpose of paying the Government revenue but for the purpose of adjusting the accounts between him and his employers and that it had been adjusted and that it was not shown that at the date of the alleged breach of trust he was not liable to his employer or the revenue authorities. Held that as the money was sent to the accused immediately before the last day and the chitallan was sent to the employers showing in its altered state the amount really payable as revenue which nearly covered the whole amount remitted, it was reasonable to infer that the accused was aware of the implied purpose for which the money was remitted and as he deposited a very much smaller amount than that remitted and tried to pass off the altered chitallan as genuine there was a dishonest misappropriation of the difference sufficient to constitute the offence under s 408 LOHIT MOHAN SARKAR v QUEEN EXPRESS

21 — Penal Code s 409—Rice condemned and ordered to be destroyed—Property according to the Penal Code—Sale of the same by municipal inspector—A certain consignment of rice lay unclaimed at the Kudderpore Docks and was advertised for sale by auction by the Port Commissioners. Before it was put up to auction the rice was found to be in a rotten condition. It was condemned and with the consent of the Port Commissioners seized by the officers of the Health Department of the Corporation of Calcutta and ordered to be destroyed. Held that assuming that the rice was entrusted by the Superintendent of the Health Department to the accused (who were inspectors employed in that department) for the purpose of destruction and that the accused instead of destroying the rice sold the same to a third party and retained the proceeds of such sale they did not commit the offence of criminal breach of trust as public servants. Semble—The accused committed no offence punishable under the Penal Code though they may have been guilty of infringing a departmental rule. EXPRESS v WILKINSON and confined there under Act I of 1871. The books kept at the station showed that the pony had been sold by auction under the Act and purchased by one Gopinath. After some time the pony had eventually been purchased by the accused from a vendor from Gopinath. The Magistrate found on the evidence that there had been no sale under Act I of 1871 and convicted the accused of criminal breach of trust and sentenced him under s 406 of the Penal Code. Held the conviction was illegal. There must be an entrusting of the accused with the property and that he dishonestly misappropriated it there must be an intention on the part of the accused to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss. QUEEN v. 11 — Failure to account—Penal Code ss 406 407 409—The prisoner a gowastab took from his employers between 15th April and 30th June sums amounting to Rs600 for the purchase of wood. During that period he supplied wood to the value of Rs234 but the prosecutor alleged that most of that was to be set off against balance to the debit of the prisoner for the year before and that the value of the firewood was as a fact only Rs34. The prisoner was charged with criminal breach of trust as a servant. The defence was that he had purchased wood and made advances on that account but this defence was proved to be false. The Magistrate convicted him but the Judge held it was merely a failure to account and acquitted the prisoner. Held the prisoner was guilty of criminal breach of trust. WATSON v. GOLAN KHAN

12 — Penal Code s 405—Where a complaint only amounted to a statement that the accused had in consequence of certain arrangements made with the complainant's father received certain moneys and had refused to render accounts but contained no allegation that he had in fact realized and dishonestly misappropriated any particular sum and obviously was made for the purpose of forcing him to render accounts—Held that the Magistrate was right in dismissing it since the facts alleged did not constitute criminal breach of trust. QUEEN v. PARSU & MURRAY I L R., II All, 668

13 — Partner—Master and servant—The accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of the value of goods which had been entrusted to him to sell. It was urged before the High Court that the conviction could not be sustained as the accused was a partner with the prosecutor. Held by JACKSON J that the finding of the Magistrate and Sessions Judge on the evidence was to the effect that the prisoner was not a partner but a servant; that such finding could not be interfered with by the Court as a Court of revision unless there was a mistake in law; that the finding was correct in law that the sentence of the prisoner could not be taken away to say that he was a partner but in reply that he claimed a small share in the profits and that such claim did not make him a partner an agent's remuneration being a share in the profits not constituting the agent a partner. Held by KEMP and MITTEN JJ (releasing the prisoner) that though the allowance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant the accused in this case distinctly pleaded he was a partner and not only that he was entitled to a share in the profits that the lower Courts did not specifically decide that the accused was a servant and that the prosecutor's remedy was a civil suit for an account. IN THE MATTER OF LALL CHAND ROY [9 W R., Cr 37]

14 — Public servant—Penal Code s 409—A village shroff whose duty it was to assist in collecting the public revenue received gram from rayats and gave receipts as if for money received by virtue of a private arrangement. Held that he could not be convicted of criminal breach of trust by a public servant under s 409 of the Penal Code as he was not authorized to receive the public revenue in kind and the party who delivered the gram did not thereby discharge himself from liability for the revenue. ANONYMOUS, 4 Mad., Ap 23

2. ————— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) ss 366 498—Cognizance of offence by Court—Criminal Procedure Code (1892) s 193—Feticide against married woman—Conviction for minor offence where evidence is insufficient for grave offence—The complainant charged the accused with an offence under s. 366 of the Penal Code in respect of his wife. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s. 498 there being no complaint by the husband and that the offence did not fall under s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code referred the case to the High Court. Held that such a case is within the intention of s. 233. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366 a conviction under s. 498 may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one. JATHA SURESH v REAZAT SURESH

given by them before the committing Magistrate; and the Sessions Judge purporting to act under s 219 Act V of 1872 disarded the evidence taken before himself and grounded his judgment on the evidence given before the Magistrate and on this evidence convicted the prisoner and sentenced him to death. On appeal by the prisoner,—Held that a 219 did not warrant such a course of proceeding. That section merely authorizes the Court to take a particular statement made by a witness before the Magistrate as the true statement notwithstanding that it is denied or a statement inconsistent with it was made by the witness before the Judge, only if the Judge should see that the original statement was worthy of belief and does not mean that the Court should discard wholly the testimony of the same persons given before another officer. 1. — Deposition taken before Magistrate—Evidence before Sessions Judge—Discretion of Sessions Judge—The purpose of s 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as amended by s 20 of Act XI of 1874 is to make depositions given before Magistrates in the preliminary inquiry evidence in the trial before the Court of Session only when the Sessions Judge determines in the exercise of his discretion that they are to be used in this way. But the exercise of this discretion considering it as a matter of fact or law is open to review by the Appellate Court. REG v. ABJAY MEONA

2. — Former deposition of witness—Evidence Act s 60—The confession of a witness in the shape of a former deposition can be used as evidence against a prisoner only on the condition prescribed by s 219 Criminal Procedure Code 1874—that is, it must have been duly taken by the committing officer in the presence of the person against whom it is to be used. The certificate of the Magistrate appended to such confession in order to afford prima facie evidence under s 80 of the Evidence Act of the circumstances mentioned in it relative to the taking of the statement ought to give the facts necessary to render the deposition admissible under s 219. QUEEN v. VESTERBROEK

4. — Inference from confession—On the trial of a prisoner for the murder of his child the witnesses for the prosecution gave evidence contradicting the evidence

5. — Use in Sessions Court of evidence taken before the committing Magistrate—Although under certain circumstances a Court of Session may use evidence given before the committing Magistrate as if it had been given before itself it is not proper for a Court of Session to base a conviction solely upon such evidence there being no other evidence on the record to corroborate it. QUEEN v. AMANULLA

6. — Duty of Sessions Judge as to evidence taken before the Magistrate—Sessions Judges should act with great caution in exercising the discretion given to them by s 219 Code of Criminal Procedure in admitting evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate. Where at a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge admitted, and s 219 Code of Criminal Procedure such evidence without any inquiry as to the allegation made by the witness in his statement before the Magistrate was made under pressure and threat by the police—Held that the District Judge should not have placed reliance on the evidence as given before the Magistrate and that he would have shown a better discretion if he had first made an inquiry by examining the police officer as to the restraint and pressure under which the statement was alleged to have been made. A witness was not examined in the Sessions Court with regard to the particular statements made by him before the committing Magistrate and he did not repeat those statements before the Sessions Court. Held that the Sessions Judge could not properly admit such statements in evidence unless s 219 Criminal Procedure Code. Where a witness was examined in the Sessions Court and had shown no disposition in any way to recede from any statement he had made before the committing Magistrate

the admission of that deposition by a Sessions Judge under a 288 Code of Criminal Procedure was improper Queen v Amanulla 10 B L R 4p 1s 21 W R, Cr 49 and Queen Empress v Din Sahai 1 L R, 7 All, 562 111 wcd. Where a medical officer gave evidence before the committing Magistrate and it was not certified that the evidence was given in presence of the accused—Held that the admission of such evidence by the Sessions Judge under a 288 Code of Criminal Procedure was also improper. Where the police had kept a witness under surveillance for four days and the Sessions Judge considered that they were justified under the circumstances of the case—Held that there was no warrant in law for the police to keep the witness under such restraint and that statements so obtained can hardly be regarded as voluntary BARANGI LAL v EMPRESS

[4 C W N., 40

7 — Previous statement to committing Magistrate retracted in Sessions Court—Use of such statement by Sessions Court as substantiation to evidence—Where a witness who has made a statement before the committing Magistrate subsequently recedes from that statement in the Court of Session the statement made before the committing Magistrate can be used under a 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to contradict the witness but the use of such statement as substantial evidence of the facts alleged by the witness on the prior occasion is fraught with the gravest peril and could never have been the intention of the Legislature QUEEN EMPRESS v NIRMAL DAS 1 L R 22 All 445

8 — Admissibility of evidence—Statement of approver made before committing Magistrate and afterwards retracted in the Court of Session—Pardon was tendered by a Magistrate to one of several persons who were being tried before him for dacoity. The pardon was accepted and the person to whom it was tendered made a statement as a witness before the Magistrate. The case having been committed to the Court of Session the approver in that Court totally repudiated his statement made before the Magistrate. Held that this repudiation did not prevent the Sessions Court from considering the evidence of the approver under the provisions of a 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure QUEEN EMPRESS v BOXYJU

9 — Refusal to allow cross examination of witnesses—A B and C having been charged with murder before a Magistrate two vakils presented their vakalutnamas and applied to be allowed to conduct the defence of the accused. The Magistrate refused permission and, after recording the depositions of the witnesses committed the accused to take their trial before the Sessions Court. In the Court of the Magistrate the only material evidence for the prosecution was that of three witnesses, who on being examined in the Sessions Court denied all

knowledge of the facts to which they had deposed before the Magistrate. Two of them denied having made the statements recorded while the third admitted the statements attributed to him but asserted they were false and made under pressure. The Sessions Judge disbelieving the statements made in his Court thereupon under a 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 15, 2 (as amended by a 20 of the Amending Act) used the previous depositions as evidence in the case and mainly upon these convicted the accused of murder and sentenced them to transportation for life. Against this conviction and sentence the prisoners appealed to the High Court on the ground that the previous depositions ought not to have been used as evidence in the case as the Magistrate had refused to allow their pleaders to appear and cross-examine the witnesses who made the depositions. The High Court affirmed the convictions and sentence. IN THE MATTER OF DHAM MUNDUL

— Meaning of words no evidence in section—The words "no evidence" in the second and third clauses of a 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) must not be read as meaning "no satisfactory trustworthy or conclusive evidence." If there is evidence the trial must go on to its close; when in trials by jury the jury and in other trials the Judge after considering the opinions of the assessors have to find on the facts. It is only in the absence of any evidence as to the commission of the offence by the accused that the Court can record an acquittal without allowing the trial to go on or obtaining the opinion of the assessors or that the Court can direct the jury without going into the defence to return a verdict of not guilty. Queen Empress v Munna Lal 1 L R 10 All 414 approved.

6 ————— Duty of Sessions Judge as to evidence taken before the Magistrate—Sessions Judges should act with great caution in exercising the discretion given to them by s. 249 Code of Criminal Procedure in admitting evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate. Where at a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge admitted, under s. 249 Code of Criminal Procedure, such evidence without any inquiry as to the allegation made by the witness that her statement before the Magistrate was made under pressure and threat by the police—Held made under pressure and threat by the police—Held that the District Judge should not have placed reliance on the evidence as given before the Magistrate and that he would have shown a better discretion if he had first made some inquiry by examining the police officer as to the real nature and pressure under which the statement was alleged to have been made. A witness was not examined in the Sessions Court with regard to the particular statement made by him before the committing Magistrate and he did not repeat those statements before the Sessions Court. Held that the Sessions Judge could not properly admit such statements in evidence under s. 249 Criminal Procedure Code. for orders. It appeared that W whose understanding was of the most limited character was caught at night in a house with some anklets in his possession. He was a lad of 15 or 16 years of age and had been deaf and dumb from his birth. He sometimes lived with his father and sometimes by begging and there was little doubt that hunger had driven him to break into the house. He had never been in arrest before. The Court recommended that he should be made over to his father. QUEEN v. GAYOA 7 N W., 131

2. — Deaf and dumb person—Ability to understand charge—In the case of an accused person who was deaf and dumb the Deputy Magistrate who tried and convicted him considered that he did not understand the proceedings and accordingly referred the case to the Magistrate under s. 186 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate considered that the accused did understand what he was charged with. Held that the finding of the Magistrate must prevail and s. 186 did not apply. DOHERI HULWAI v. ANONYMOUS [19 W R Cr, 37]

3. — Deaf and dumb person—Trial of—The High Court under the circumstances of this case which came before it under the last clause of s. 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1872 set aside the conviction of the prisoner who was deaf and dumb and directed that he be admonished and discharged. DWARKANATH HALDAR v. NODER CHAUD HANTS 22 W R Cr., 35

4. — Deaf and dumb person—Trial of—The High Court may under s. 186 Criminal Procedure Code in the trial of a person who is deaf and dumb and who cannot understand the proceedings against him or plead to the charge treat the proceedings as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence upon the prisoner according to the facts which seem to be established in the course and as the result of those proceedings. In this case the Court had no doubt that the prisoner was guilty but before passing final orders, it gave the prisoner a further opportunity of being heard and accordingly directed the Magistrate to give him notice. QUEEN v. BOWKA HARI 22 W R Cr. 35

He was subsequently convicted by the Magistrate and this conviction was confirmed by the High Court. QUEEN v. BOWKA 22 W R Cr., 73

The accused was deaf and dumb and could not be made to understand the proceedings which had been taken. On the proceedings being forwarded to the High Court under s. 341 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it was held that the law does not contemplate that the Sessions trial should necessarily take place. That it is discretionary with the High Court on a commitment made to order the Sessions trial to be held and the High Court must consider whether any benefit would be likely to result especially to the accused by such trial. The High Court in this case having come to the conclusion that no benefit would be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Sessions found that the accused was guilty of the alleged murder but that he was by reason of unsoundness of mind not responsible for his action and directed him to be kept in the district jail to await the orders of Government. QUEEN EMPRESS v. 4 ————— Examination of accused person—Power of Magistrate to question the accused — Where a Magistrate before evidence taken is the prosecution put questions to the accused of the nature of a cross examination such procedure was illegal as it could not be said that the questions were put for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him in the evidence within the meaning of a 31. of the Code of Criminal Procedure. QUEEN IMPRESS v HAWTHORNE I L R., 18 All, 345

5 ————— Sessions trial—Accused persons Examination of — Questions put by the Court to an accused person under the provisions of a 312 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1891. must be strictly limited to the purposes described in that section of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. The evidence referred to in that section is the evidence already given at the trial at the time when the Court puts questions to the accused. QUEEN IMPRESS v HAROORIND SINGH I L R 14 All 242

6 ————— Witness—Accused person calling as witnesses persons charged with him and awaiting a separate trial for same offence—Evidence Act (I of 1872) s 132 — The accused D a European British subject was charged together with others who were natives of India under ss 381 385 and 389 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with conspiring to commit extortion. D claimed to be tried by a mixed jury under s 400 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898). The other accused who were natives of India then claimed to be tried separately under s 452. The trial of D then proceeded and at the close of the case for the prosecution he proposed to call as his witnesses the persons who had been charged with him and who were awaiting their trial. They objected to be called. Held that he was entitled to call them as witnesses and to examine them on oath. The words the accused in cl 4 of s 34 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) mean the accused then under trial and under examination by the Court. QUEEN IMPRESS v DEWANT I L R. 23 Bom, 213

A second class Magistrate having held that a prima facie case had been established against the accused in a case of mischief adjourned the trial to enable the accused to adduce evidence. On the day to which the trial was adjourned the complainant not being present the Magistrate acquitted the accused under s 217 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The District Magistrate entertained an appeal from this order under s 423 (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure reversed it and directed a re hearing on the ground that the complainant and his vakil had appeared before the Court shortly after the case had been dismissed by the second class Magistrate. The Court of Session considering that the accused persons had been improperly discharged forwarded the record to the Magistrate of the district suggesting to him to make the case over to a Subordinate Magistrate with directions to enquire into any offence other than the offence in respect of which the accused persons had been discharged which the evidence on the record showed to have been committed. The Subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over made an inquiry and committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session on charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the Court of Session was not competent to direct the accused persons to be committed under s. 296 of Act V of 1872 the case not being a Sessions case within the meaning of that section and that the commitment was consequently illegal. Held that there was no direction to commit within the meaning of that section that is to say to send the accused persons at once to the Sessions Court without further inquiry and whether or not the inquiry was made in consequence of the suggestions of the Court of Session was immaterial and that the inquiry upon the charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code was rightly held by the Subordinate Magistrate and the commitment could not be impeached. EXPRESS v. The accused was not called upon to show cause why a further inquiry should not be made but a summons in the terms of s 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code was issued to him. On his appearance he was tried by the Magistrate of the district convicted and sentenced. The witnesses for the prosecution were not recalled but the Magistrate relied upon their evidence as recorded in the first trial and also upon the statement of a witness for the defence which was not receivable in evidence. Held that the proceedings of the Magistrate of the district were irregular first because notice to show cause why action should not be taken against him in the terms of s 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not served upon the accused person before proceedings ostensibly under that section were commenced and secondly because the subsequent proceedings of the Magistrate were not such as are contemplated by the provisions of s 437 inasmuch as the conviction was practically based upon evidence which was not recorded in the course of a further inquiry before the Magistrate of the district but upon evidence which was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate and had been adjudicated upon by that officer and such irregularities were fatal to the conviction. QUEEN v. 23 ——— Complaint—Dismissal of—Several of proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code s. 437—A complaint was made before a Magistrate of the first class of an offence punishable under s. 323 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate recorded a brief statement by the complainant but did not ask him if he had any witnesses to call. An order was passed directing that a copy of the petition of complaint should be sent to the police station calling for a report on the matter and on receipt of the report the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There was nothing in the Magistrate's original order to show that he saw reason to distrust the truth of the complaint nor did he direct any local investigation to be made by a police officer for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. Subsequent to the dismissal of the complaint the same complainant brought a fresh charge upon the same facts against the same persons in the same Court and upon this charge the accused were tried convicted and sentenced. Held that the Magistrate in ordering a further inquiry on receipt of the complainant's second petition did not act contrary to any provision of the law and that considering the circumstances under which the first complaint had been dismissed a further inquiry was necessary. QUEEN EMPRESS v CHAK I L R. 9 All 85*

(Act X of 1882) s 437 - Notice to an accused person is necessary in pursuance of law before an order under s 437 can be passed but as a matter of discretion it is proper that such notice should be given. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (PRINSEY WILLOT TOTTERHAM MORRIS PIGOR and O'HENRLEY JJ) - After an inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate and the discharge of an accused person a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has jurisdiction under s 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further inquiry or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate as when no further evidence is forthcoming. But (PRINSEY J dissenting) the words "further inquiry" in that section mean the inquiry preliminary to trial which regularly results in a charge or discharge and do not include the trial. And if on the evidence taken the accused ought to be committed then in a case triable only at the Sessions the proper course is to commit under s 476 in other cases to refer to the High Court. Per PRINSEY J - The word inquiry includes a trial and the further inquiry would therefore all of the framing of a charge and the cross examination of witnesses for the prosecution. Per TOTTERHAM C.J. and GHOSE J - The power given by s 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further inquiry is confined to cases in which the referring officer is satisfied for one of the reasons mentioned in s 435 that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials and that with a more exhaustive inquiry further material would be forthcoming. It was not intended that such an enquiry should be granted simply for the reconsideration of evidence. IN THE MATTER OF HARI DASS SANGAL v SARITULLA I L R 15 Cal 608

25 - Further inquiry - Notice to the accused - Practice - Before making an order for further inquiry under s 437 Criminal Procedure Code a notice should be given to the accused person to give him an opportunity of being heard upon the question whether any further inquiry should be made. Hari Dass Sangal v Saritulla I L R 15 Cal 608 followed. JALALI HAN v SUPHAL SINGH [3 C W N 196]

26 - Discretion of Court - Further inquiry - Notice - Although there is nothing in s 437 rendering it incumbent to give notice before directing a further inquiry yet a Court would not be exercising a proper discretion if before ordering a further inquiry it did not give notice to the accused to show cause against such order. Where therefore a further inquiry was directed with at such previous notice to the accused the High Court set aside the order. Hari Dass Sangal v Saritulla I L R 15 Cal 608 followed. IN THE MATTER OF AMT I AMIADAR 3 C W N 249

abkari inspector visited a toddy shop where the complainant and one D were employed as agents for the sale of toddy. Having reason to suspect that an offence under the Abkari Act (Bombay Act V of 1878) had been committed the accused made an inquiry in the course of which the complainant made certain statements implicating his fellow servant. The accused thereupon resolved to prosecute D and make the complainant a witness in the case. In order to prevent him being tutored the accused ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp and there detained him during the night and on the following morning sent him in charge of a sepoy to a Magistrate's Court where the complainant repeated the statements made by him before the accused. He was then allowed to go away. The accused prosecuted D and in the course of his trial admitted in his deposition that he had ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp and had detained him there during the night. After the termination of D's trial the complainant charged the accused with wrongful confinement under s 341 of the Penal Code. The accused pleaded that the complainant had voluntarily come to his tent to have his statements reduced to writing and that he had of his own accord stepped in his camp during the night. The trying Magistrate held this plea proved and discharged the accused under s 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1882). The Sessions Judge held that though the accused had detained the complainant in his camp during the night still he was not guilty of any offence under the Penal Code as he had acted with malice and to the best of his judgment. He therefore declined to interfere or order a further inquiry. Held by the High Court on revision that the trying Magistrate had negligently omitted to take into consideration the admissions made by the accused in his deposition in D's case. Those admissions had an important bearing on the present case. They were admissible in evidence against the accused and as they were left out of consideration the inquiry was necessarily incomplete and improper. Further inquiry was therefore ordered. DEWJA v CLIFFORD

Procedure—Under a 471 Criminal Procedure Code the Court must first make a preliminary enquiry to satisfy itself that a specific charge coming under the sections mentioned in it ought to be preferred against the accused; and after being so satisfied it must either commit the case or send the case to the Magistrate for enquiry whether a commitment should be made or not. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KALI PROSUNNO BAGCHER [23 W. 4. Act XXIII of 1861 s 16

Order sending case to Magistrate for enquiry into offence of giving false evidence—Preliminary enquiry—Laziness of charge—Although s 16 of Act XXIII of 1861 gives Civil Courts powers similar to those conferred on Civil and Criminal Courts alike by s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code the whole law as to the procedure in cases within these sections is now embodied in s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In a suit brought to recover possession of certain property the Judge decided one of the issues raised in the plaintiff's favour but on the important issue as to whether the plaintiff ever had possession he found for the defendant. The plaintiff was not examined but on the issue as to possession he called two witnesses. The Judge disbelieved their statements and considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case gave judgment for the defendant without requiring him to give evidence on that issue. In the concluding paragraph of his judgment the Judge directed the depositions of the two witnesses above referred to together with the English memoranda of their evidence to be sent to the Magistrate with a view to his enquiring whether or not they had voluntarily given false evidence in a judicial proceeding; and he further directed the Magistrate to enquire whether or not the plaintiff had abetted the offence of giving false evidence on the ground that as the witnesses were the plaintiff's servants he must personally have influenced them and also to enquire whether the plaintiff which the plaintiff had attested contained averments which he knew to be false. On a motion to quash this order—Held that under s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Judge had no power to send a case to a Magistrate except when after having made such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground (i.e. ground of a nature higher than mere surmise or suspicion) for directing judicial enquiry into the matter of a specific charge; and that the Judge is bound to moderate the particular statements or averments in respect of which he considers that there is ground for a charge into which the Magistrate ought to enquire; and that the order was bad because the Judge had made no preliminary enquiry and because it was too vague and general in its character. QUEEN v BAIYOO LALL IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KALI PROSUNNO BAGCHER [1 L. R. 1 Cal. 450]

5. Power of and procedure of Court in making order under section—Order directing prosecution—Before a Court is justified in making an order under s 470 directing the prosecution of any person it ought to have before it direct evidence fixing the offence upon the person whom it is sought to charge either in the course of the preliminary enquiry referred to in that section or in the earlier proceedings out of which the enquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some sort of suspicion that the person had been guilty of an offence; but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by the person who is to be prosecuted. Queen v Baiyoo Lall 1 L. 9 ————— Institution of criminal prosecution pending appeal in Civil Court—If in the course of a proceeding either civil or criminal a Judge or Magistrate finds clear ground for believing that either the parties to the proceeding or their witnesses have committed perjury or any other offence against public justice he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such person under s 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code without any further enquiry than that which he has already held in his own Court. As a matter of discretion and propriety it is right for a Court before committing a person on a charge of perjury upon his own uncontradicted statement to await the hearing of the appeal where an appeal is pending in the case in which he is charged with such perjury. IN THE MATTER OF MUTTU LALL GHOSH I. 10 ————— Power to commit for offences—S 471 deals with a more extended class of cases, viz. all those mentioned in ss 467 468 and 469 in which not merely a Civil Court but any Court Civil or Criminal and which possesses or not possessing the power to commit to the Court of Session is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for holding an enquiry and it enacts the procedure to be followed by the Court which may elect to adopt one of two courses that is to say it may either commit a case to the Court of Session if and where it has the power to do so or if it has not that power or is not disposed to exercise it it may send the case to a Magistrate having power to try or commit for trial the accused person for the offence charged. EMRESS v. 12 ————— Preliminary enquiry—An order made under s 471 of Act X of 1872 sending a case for enquiry to a Magistrate is not necessarily bad because the Court did not make a preliminary enquiry before making such order. The law requires only such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary. Held therefore where a Munsif being of opinion that both the parties to a suit tried by him had given false evidence thereon on certain points sent the case for enquiry to the Magistrate under s 471 of Act X of 1872 with a proceeding embodying the facts of the case and charging the parties respectively with giving false evidence on such points and there was nothing to show that any enquiry that the Munsif could have thereupon applied to the Magistrate who took proceedings under s. 501 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The lady superintendent of the Mission house denied that the girl was legally married and alleged that she was practically born, brought up with the omniscience of the mother to a life of prostitution.

The Magistrate after recording evidence found that the girl was legally married; that the other allegation was not established; and that although she went to and remained in the Mission house of her own free will there was under the circumstances an unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose. He further section directing the girl to be restored to her mother.

Held upon the facts as found by the Magistrate as it was immaterial whether the girl did or did not consent to remain at the Mission house there was an unlawful detention within the meaning of these words as used in the section as the girl was kept against the will of those who were lawfully entitled only as it does to women and female children must not be construed so as to make it include purposes which, although not unlawful in themselves might only become so when entertained towards a child in opposition to the wishes of its guardian but that the purpose whether entertained towards a woman or a female child must be in itself unlawful. Held consequently that in the circumstances of the case there was no detention for an unlawful purpose and that the Magistrate had no power to make the order.

Held further that although the Magistrate had no power and the section to make the order he did it did not follow that the Court should direct the girl to be restored to the custody of the lady superintendent at even if it had the power to do so and that having regard to the circumstances of the case there was nothing to justify such an order being made.

2. — Irregularity—Waiver or consent by prisoner—Recording statements of witnesses—The jailor of a district jail being accused by one of the jail clerks of falsifying his accounts and defrauding the Government the matter was enquired into by the District Magistrate and the jailor was by the Magistrate's order placed on trial before a Bench of Magistrates consisting of the District Magistrate himself, the Officiating Superintendent of the jail and three other Honorary Magistrates. The prisoner and his pleaders were alleged to have stated before the commencement of the trial on being questioned that they had no objection to the composition of the Bench but after the charges had been framed the prisoner's counsel objected to the Bench as formed. The District Magistrate directed the Government pleader to prosecute and both the District Magistrate and L gave evidence for the prosecution. After the case for the prosecution was closed two formal charges were drawn up namely that the prisoner had debited Government with the price of more oil seed than he actually purchased and that he had received payment for certain oil at a higher rate than he credited to Government. The money, the receipt of which were the subject of the first charge were obtained by the prisoner on the strength of certain vouchers which he had induced L to sign as correct and L had sanctioned the sale at the rates credited to Government. Upon the prisoner's giving the names of the witnesses he intended to call in his defence L was deputed by his brother Magistrates to examine some of them who were connected with the jail in order to guard against deviation and the depositions so taken were placed on the record to be used by either party though not themselves as evidence. The prisoner was convicted. On a motion to quash the conviction—Held that the recording the statements of the prisoner's witnesses was irregular, but in criminal proceedings are bad unless they are taken in the manner prescribed by law and of the peace existed in respect of the trial but the defect was not between L on the one side and waiver or consent of the other nor did it set forth the grounds on which he was so satisfied that such dispute was defective. In the proceedings the Magistrate referred to a police report which however did not show that a breach of the peace was imminent. Held that although this report might be taken to be incorporated by reference yet that it was not sufficient to justify the order. Per FRIED J.—Unless the parties are able to show that there is such a dispute as is likely to induce a breach of the peace the Magistrate should hold his hand and not proceed further. When the rights of the parties have been determined by a competent Court the dispute is at an end, and it is the duty of the Magistracy to maintain the rights of the successful party and the proper course for the Magistrate to pursue if the defeated party does any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace is to take action under s 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code and require from such person security to keep the peace. IN RE GONDI CHAUDHARI MOTRA

5. — Summary jurisdiction—Unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons—Splitting offence—Right of appeal Deprivation of—No Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction. If a charge of an offence not triable summarily is laid and sworn to the Magistrate must proceed with the case accordingly unless he is at the outset in a position to show from the deposition of the complainant that the circumstances of aggravation are really mere exaggeration and not to be believed. Therefore a Magistrate when he has before him a person charged with having been armed with a deadly weapon while a member of an unlawful assembly is not at liberty to disregard that part of the charge which charges the prisoner with having been armed with a deadly weapon and so to give himself jurisdiction to try the case summarily and then by inflicting a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months to deprive the prisoner of his right of appeal. EXPRESS v. The appointment of the Magistrate who in the first instance had tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an enquiry subsequently directed in the same case censured as being unprecedented and objectionable. A Public Prosecutor should be without a personal interest in the cases which he conducts. Prisoners should be allowed to have free converse with their relatives out of the hearing of the police officers in charge of such prisoners. It is undesirable that Magistrates whose decisions are under appeal or who have been engaged in promoting the prosecution or police officers concerned in a case should sit on the bench and converse privately in Court with the Judge who is engaged in trying the prisoners' appeal. 63. Criminal Procedure Code 1892 s 530 cl (p)—Offence originally cognizable by a second class Magistrate subsequently non cognizable by reason of an aggravating circumstance—Duty of inferior Court—The accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt as members of an unlawful assembly under ss 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact and he convicted the accused under s 325 of the Code. The accused appealed. The District Magistrate who heard one appeal and the first class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals were both of opinion that the offences committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s 326 of the Penal Code and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the second class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper under the circumstances of the case to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge on examining the record of the case was of opinion that as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate his proceedings were void ab initio under s 630 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He therefore referred the case to the High Court and recommended that the convictions under s 325 should be set aside. Held that the proceedings before the second class Magistrate were not void ab initio as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss. 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code with which they were originally charged. Held also that though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation such as the use of a dangerous weapon which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings as the accused were not in any way prejudiced and the sentences were not inadequate. *QUEEN EMPRESS v. The woman alleged to have been enticed away resided in Bombay but the alleged adultery took place at Khandala outside the jurisdiction. At the enquiry before the Magistrate in Bombay objection was taken as to his jurisdiction with regard to the charge of adultery. The Magistrate however overruled the objections and committed the accused for trial. At the trial an application was made on behalf of the accused, under s 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) that the commitment should be quashed and a fresh enquiry directed on the ground that an objection had been taken to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Held refusing the application that the commitment being an order (see *Queen Empress v. Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil litigation—Civil Procedure Code (1882) s 278—Inquiry into claim to attached property—Subsequent civil suit by claimant to establish his right to the property—Criminal Procedure Code (1882) s 478—It is not an invariable rule that criminal proceedings should be stayed during the pendency of civil litigation regarding the same subject matter. Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No 1 applied to have the attachment raised on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry which was made under s 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) he produced the sale-deed and accused No 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was a forgery and rejected the claim. Proceeding then under s 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) he held the inquiry directed by that section and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. During the pendency of the inquiry under s. 478 the accused No. 1 filed a civil suit to establish the genuineness of the sale deed and set aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit. Held refusing the application that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit. IN RE DEVI VALAB BHAYANI

68 ————— Power of the High Court to stay proceedings before Magistrate pending a civil suit—Per RAMPRASAD J.—The High Court has no power to direct that criminal proceedings in the Court of a Magistrate should be stayed until the disposal of a civil suit in which the question at issue in the criminal proceedings is all have been decided. In the matter of Ram Prasad Baxa B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 102 followed. It is very doubtful if the High Court has any power to pass an order quashing the proceedings before a Magistrate. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly authorizes the High Court to quash pending proceedings. Per GHOSE J.—A proceeding in a criminal Court should not as a general rule be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit in regard to the same subject matter but ordinarily it is not desirable if the parties to the two proceedings are substantially the same and the prosecution is but a private prosecution, and the issues in the two Courts are substantially identical, that both the cases should go on at one and the same time. It is open to the Magistrate having regard to the facts of the case before him to consider whether it is not desirable that the proceedings in his Court should be stayed till the decision of the civil suit or for a limited period of time and it is also open to him to put the defendant on terms as to appearance or otherwise if he does stay proceedings. The High Court has the power to order a Magistrate to stay proceedings in his Court if a sufficient cause in that behalf is made out. But inasmuch as the Legislature has given him the power to regulate the proceedings in his own Court the direction should ordinarily be left to him either to stay proceedings or not as he, in the circumstances of each case may think right and proper. PER HANMANT DEBI & BAMA DORABAI DEBI

One of the accused had made a confessional statement before the Magistrate who recorded it but did not make on it a memorandum to the effect stated in Criminal Procedure Code s 104 and did not admit it in evidence for the reasons that the accused was produced in the custody of the police in which he had been detained for five days and there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat him as an approver. It appeared that a perusal of the preliminary register would have shown that the accused were either guilty under s 396 or not guilty under s 395 at all. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge with a jury. The confessional statement was not admitted in evidence. The jury found the accused not guilty of dacoity but the Judge, disagreeing with the verdict, referred the case to the High Court under Criminal Procedure Code s 307. Held (1) that the procedure adopted by the Judge was wrong and that he should have tried the accused with the aid of assessors under Indian Penal Code s 396; (2) that the Judge should have enquired under Criminal Procedure Code s 333 whether the confessional statement had been duly made and (3) that under the circumstances the High Court should determine on the evidence on record after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury whether the accused were guilty under s 395. QUEEN EMPRESS & ANGA LALAYAN

SRI SUDHAR PAIRU v. INDRABHOOSIV
CHUCKERBUTTY 18 W R 25

21 — Infringement of exclusive right of fishery in public river—The unlawful infringement of a right of exclusive fishery in a part of a public river is not an offence which can be brought within the definition of criminal trespass in the Penal Code. EMPRESS v. CHART NAYIAH

22 — House trespass — Possession of property the subject of criminal trespass—Penal Code ss 441 442 and 443—C a rate payer in a municipality who had filed a petition against an assessment which in his absence had been dismissed entered a room where a Committee of the Municipal Commissioners were seated hearing and deciding petitions in assessment matters ostensibly with the object of presenting a petition for the revision of his assessment. The Chairman of the Committee ordered him to leave the room and on his refusal to do so he was turned out. Outside the room in the verandah he addressed the crowd complaining that no justice was to be obtained from the Committee. C was prosecuted on these facts at the instance of the Chairman of the Committee and convicted of house trespass under s 443 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong and that no offence had been committed. The prosecution was bound to prove in order to support a conviction of a charge under s 441 or s 442 that the property trespassed upon was at the time in the possession of a complainant who could compound the offence under s 845 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the complainant had failed to prove that the room was in his possession and had in fact shown that he was merely sitting in it with other persons at the invitation and with the consent of the person whoever he might be who had the immediate right to such possession. Held further that even if the complainant could be held to be in possession of the room there was no evidence of any intent to commit an offence or to intimidate insult or annoy any person it appearing that the object of the accused in going into and remaining in the room was to endeavor to induce the complainant and his colleagues to reconsider their decision the verbal insult on which the conviction was based having been uttered after C had left the room. CHANDI PRASAD v. 23 — Penal Code ss 441 442 457 and 509—Lurking house trespass by night—Intrusion on privacy—Intention—Chao Form of Criminal Procedure Code (1882) ss 221 222 and 537—A conviction for lurking house trespass by night under s 446 of the Penal Code is not bad for want of the specification of the intention in the charge but one under s 447 cannot be sustained without such specification. In a charge

under the former section though a guilty intention must be proved it is not necessary to prove which of the several guilty intentions the accused had; it will be enough if it is shown that the intention must have been one or other of those specified in s 441 though it may not be certain which it was. An accused person the landlord of a house in which he occupied the lower flat was found in the middle of the night in the room of the complainant one of his tenants upstairs in which the complainant and his wife were at the time sleeping. Upon being detected the accused was subjected to very severe treatment but did not utter a word of protestation of innocence or make any show of remonstrance and when questioned said I have committed a fault pardon me. He was arrested upon a charge under s 456 of the Penal Code the criminal intention alleged being that of committing theft. The charge framed by the Magistrate did not specify any intention and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the trespass was not committed by the accused who was a wealthy man with that intention. He found however that the complainant had suppressed some important facts and that he was not in his wife's room when the accused entered it and relying on the decision in Kotla Chandra Chakrabarty v. Queen Empress I L R 18 Cal 687 he convicted the accused. On appeal the Sessions Judge though finding that the Magistrate's views were against the evidence upheld the conviction without finding what specifically was the intention with which the entry was made. In revision it was contended that the conviction was bad (1) because no guilty intention was set out in the charge; (2) because no such intention was proved by the evidence; and (3) because no such intention was specifically found by the Sessions Judge. Held that the first contention was not sustainable for the reasons above stated. Even if it had been necessary to specify the intention in the charge it would have to be shown under the provisions of s 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that the omission had occasioned a failure of justice and having regard to the nature of the charge and the line of defence adopted the accused had not in any way been prejudiced in his defence. Held as regards the second contention that though it was not certain what the precise intention of the accused was in committing the trespass it was clear that it must have been with one or other of the intentions specified in s 441 of the Penal Code as judging from the time the place and manner in which the trespass was committed and the conduct of the accused when discovered it was impossible to suppose that the trespass could have been committed either unintentionally or with any innocent intention and that it must have been committed with the intention of committing some offence but that the accused was entitled to have it taken that it was with the least possible culpable intention namely an offence under s 509 of the Penal Code. Held as regards the third contention that in exercising its powers under s 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it is open to the High Court to alter any finding and confirm a conviction and that if the evidence on the record in a case be sufficient to warrant a conviction the Court

would not be justified in setting such conviction aside merely because the view taken of the evidence by the lower Court is not sustainable or some fact which ought to have been found by that Court is not found or found incorrectly BAIMAKAND RAM v GHANSAKRAM I L R. 22 Calc. 391

34. ————— Penal Code s 443—Disobedience of a legal order of Municipal Commissioners—The accused were convicted of criminal trespass under s 443 of the Penal Code for driving their carts across an open green in violation of an order issued by the Municipal Commissioners. Held that there was nothing to show that the Municipal Commissioners had authority to issue such an order and that the breach of it was not criminally punishable. ANONYMOUS 5 Mad. Ap 39

35. ————— Penal Code s 447—Cultivating waste land in village—The defendant was convicted under s 447 of the Penal Code for cultivating village waste land which he had been ordered by the Subordinate Collector to refrain from cultivating. 36. ————— Penal Code ss 441 and 486—House breaking by a girl—Intent—When a stranger uninvited and without any right to be there effects an entry into the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman a member of a respectable household and when an attempt is made to capture him uses great violence in his efforts to make good his escape a Court should presume that the entry was made with an intent such as is provided for by s 441 of the Penal Code. An accused person in the middle of the night effected an entry into a house occupied by two widows members of a respectable family. On an alarm being given and an attempt made to capture him he made use of great violence and effected his escape. Upon these facts he was charged with offences under ss 450 and 323 of the Penal Code. The defence set up was an alibi which was disbelieved by both the lower Courts. Neither Court found specifically what was the intention with which the accused entered the house but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the women. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s 456. It was contended that as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence the conviction was illegal. Held that under the circumstances of the case the Court ought to presume that the entry was effected with such intent as is provided for by s 441 and that the conviction should be upheld. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KOLASH CHANDRA CHAKRABARTY KOLASH CHANDRA CHAKRABARTY v QUEEN EMPIRE I L R. 18 Calc. 657

They went (some of them armed) without the permission of the defendant and in his absence and when the defendant's servant objected to their action they persisted in their trespass and endeavoured to prevent opposition by making false statements as to the authority under which they were acting. Held that their actions amounted to criminal trespass. GOLAN FAYDEY v BODDAM [I L R. 16 Calc. 715]

38. ————— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) ss 441 486 and 509—House breaking by night—Intent—Intrusion upon privacy—The accused in the middle of the night effected an entry into a room occupied by four women. On an alarm being given and an attempt made to capture him he escaped. He was charged with an offence under s 456 of the Penal Code. The defence set up was disbelieved by both the lower Courts. Another Court found specifically what was the intention with which the accused entered the room but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the women. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s 456. It was contended that as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence the conviction was illegal. Held that the facts proved were good evidence of an intent and of an intrusion on privacy within the meaning of s 509 of the Penal Code and that therefore the intent to commit an offence within the meaning of s 441 was made out. BAIMAKAND RAM v GHANSAKRAM I L R. 22 Calc. 391 followed. PRAMANSO SHARMA v PRY DABHU CHITRA I L R. 22 Calc. 894

house breaking and theft searched the tents of certain gipsies for the stolen property but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money which he accepted but at the same time not deeming it sufficient he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give any thing more on the ground that they were poor and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates proceeding to execute such order all the gipsies in the camp men women and children turned out some four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place where such gipsy was being bound and the head constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies the head constable fired with a gun at such crowd when it was about five paces from him and killed one of the gipsies and having done so ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested and withdrawn himself and his subordinates or had he effected his escape. Held that such head constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be their consequence and such head constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder. EMRESS v INDIA & ABDUL HAKIM 1 L R 5 All 263

The Sessions Judge found that the mother could not have been ignorant of the fact that her child was being over-fed; and such feeding was inconsistent with the terms of s 304 (a) which provides for the causing of death by any rash or negligent act not amounting to murder. Its record of the existence of a custom of pre-emption is sufficiently strong evidence to cast on those denying the custom the burden of proof; and in the same manner when it records a contract of pre-emption between the shareholders there is a presumption that it is binding on the shareholders. Looking to the public character of the document and the way it is prepared, and that all shareholders whether signing it or not must be presumed to have assented to its terms the inferences to be deduced from it cannot be disregarded except when they are rebutted by evidence of an opposite character. of pre-emption which was based on contract and custom as evidenced by the wajib ul urz of a village was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that any contract which might be founded on the wajib ul urz was not binding on the vendor-defendant as that document did not bear his signature, and the lower Appellate Court attached no weight to the wajib ul urz as proof of the custom of pre-emption because it was drawn up when Regulation VII of 1832 was in force, and at that time there was no legal presumption of its accuracy. The claim was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff's evidence did not prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village. Held that the lower Appellate Court had erred in dealing with the evidence, and that although this particular wajib-ul urz was made before Act XIX of 1873 came into force yet the weight which would attach to its entries both as proof of the contract as well of custom was very strong. Irra Singh v Ganga I L R 2 All 376 referred to MUHAMMAD HANAN v MUHNA LAL I L R, 8 All, 434

36. Wajib ul urz—Mahomedan law—It having been alleged that an estate by custom descended to a single heir in the male line the High Court concurring with the Court of first instance found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding it was argued among other objections that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajib ul urz of a zamindari village the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute the last owner of that estate who held all the shares in the village having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir the others of the family being maintained. Held that though termed an entry in a wajib ul urz the document was not entitled to the name but was rather in the nature of a testamentary attempt to make a disposition contrary to the Mahomedan law of descent. MOHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN v FIDAYAT UN NISSA I L R, 8 All, 510

37. Dhardhura—Alluvial land—Quere—What is the extent of the applicability of the custom of dhardhura in regard to alluvial land overriding the provisions of Regulation XI of 1825. NASIR-OD DEEN AHMED v GOUDER 3 Agre 1

38. Dhardhura—Appliability of custom—Accretion—The custom of dhardhura applies to lands thrown up or formed by fluvial action either in one year or in the course of a number of years. Whether it is equally applicable to chuckee formations or tracts of land covered by a sudden change in the course of a river and yet preserving their identity of site and surface after the severance, must be determined by proof of the extent of the custom. KATTIYAN v MAHOMED SHARIF OD DEEN 3 Agre, 189

39. Dhardhura—The custom of dhardhura is, when applied to lands gained otherwise than by gradual accretion, opposed to equity; and such a custom must be proved, not by the vague assertions of witnesses but by a sufficient enumeration of instances. ISRAZ SINGH v SHARAF OODREH 1 N W., 142 Ed. 1873, 224

40. Dhardhura—Beng Reg XI of 1825, ss 2 & 3 (18)—The question whether the custom of dhardhura applies to lands gained by gradual accretion only or also to lands which have been separated from a mouzah by a sudden change of stream must be determined in each case on the evidence for although the Court would be disposed to scrutinize with care evidence in regard to a custom which would have the effect of passing from one owner to another lands long held and enjoyed, and of which the character is in no way altered by river action, yet it cannot be said that such a custom can in no case be established and given effect to. Kattiyans v Mahomed Shafooddeen 3 Agre, 189 Irra Singh v Sharfodeen 1 N W., 142 and Rajendur Perab Sahet v Lathee Sahet 20 W R 427, referred to SBT Ali v MUTHU-UD-DEEN I L R, 8 All, 479

41. Validity of custom—Power of some of mirasidars to bind co-owners of village lands—A custom that some only of the mirasidars of a village should bind the co-owners of the village lands is valid. ANAKDATTAN v DEVARAJATTAN S Mad., 17

42. Usage of mangroles—Policy of insurance—Evidence of average loss—Certificate of mahajans—An alleged usage that the mahajans' certificate is deemed to be conclusive evidence against the under writer without production of manifest and account sales, and that upon proof of the certificate alone and of the policy the owner is entitled to recover his average loss cannot be upheld such not being a reasonable usage. RANGSUDAS BHAGILAL v KESRISING MOHANTAL 1 Bom., 220

43. Unreasonable custom—Broker varying contract—A custom which allows a broker to deviate from his instructions is unreasonable and the Courts of law will not enforce it. ABALPA NAIK NARSI KISHAWATI AND COMPANY S Bom., A. C., 19

44. Customary right of privacy—Right of building and to interfere with erection of building—A customary right of privacy under certain conditions exists in India and in the North Western Provinces and is not unreasonable but merely an application of the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas and adversus in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. In the case of a building for parda purposes newly erected without the acquiescence of the owner of an adjacent building site a custom preventing such owner from so building as to interfere with the privacy of the first new building would be unreasonable and consequently bad in law. But if such adjacent owner, without protest or notice allowed his neighbor to erect and consequently to incur expenses in connection with a building for the use of parda-mahil women a custom preventing him from interfering with the privacy of such new building would not

— Facts necessary to establish the existence of a customary right—Easement—Easement Act ss. 4 and 15.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a piece of land which, he alleged, formed part of the courtyard of his kothi and for demolition of a chabutra thereon. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title and alleged that they always used the chabutra as a sitting place and that during the Moharram the tazias and alems were exhibited upon the chabutra, and a takh was placed upon it. The Court of first instance found that the defendants had a right to use the land in the manner claimed during the Moharram. The lower Appellate Court on the question of the defendant's right to use the said land in the manner claimed by them, found as follows:—That various miras's, whose connection with each other is not established, have within a period of twenty years or so placed tazias upon land and sung there. Held that this finding of fact did not necessarily in law lead to the conclusion that there was a local custom by virtue of which the easement now claimed by the defendants was acquired. Where a local custom excluding or limiting the general rule of law is set up a Court should not decide that it exists unless such Court is satisfied of its reasonableness, and its certainty as to extent and application and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted, or by stealth, or by force and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned. KUAN SEN v MAMMAN I. 46. — Usage imported as term of a contract—Practices on a particular estate—In order that the practice on a particular estate may be imported as a term of the contract into a contract in respect of land in that estate, it must be shown that the practice was known to the person whom it is sought to bind by it and that he assented to its being a term of the contract; and when the person sought to be bound by the practice is an assignee for value of rights under that contract it must also be shown that he and all prior assignees (if any) for value knew that the practice was a term of the original contract. NANA VIKRAMA v RAMA PATTER I. L. R. 20 Mad. 275

47. — Custom of burial
— Local custom—Right claimed by a certain section of Mahomedans to bury their dead in a certain locality—Right of burial—Where a certain section of the Mahomedan community had been for many years in the habit of burying their dead near a darga in plaintiff's land, and the plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining them from exercising this right in future—Held that the right of burial claimed by the defendants was not an easement but a customary right which being confined to a limited class of persons and a limited area of land was sufficiently certain and reasonable to be recognized as a valid local custom. MOHIDEEN v SHIVLINGAPPA
